The song is the first to return to No. 1 since T.I.'s "Live Your Life" (featuring Rihanna) hit the top for a third stint in December 2008.

While airplay continues to build at a rapid clip (49-25 on Hot 100 Airplay, up 44%), second-week digital sales dip by 33%, resulting in a fall from No. 1.

The singer scores his best debut with the opening single from his new album "Battle Studies," due Oct. 27. It starts at No. 10 on Hot Digital Songs (102,000 copies sold).

A discounted single sold at the teen clothing chain Justice prompts a No. 1 debut on Hot Singles Sales (30,000 sold) and an inaugural Hot 100 appearance for the South Korean pop quintet.

This preview of his sixth studio album, due in early 2010, should take a nice jump next issue since first-week digital sales will affect its ranking.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

PEAS PUSH TOWARD ANOTHER NO. 1

The Black Eyed Peas could continue their Billboard Hot 100 hot streak as "Meet Me Halfway" jumps 17-9. The follow-up track to successive double-digit-week No. 1s takes Greatest Gainer/Digital honors, more than doubling its downloads (127,000 sold) and rising 17-5 on Hot Digital Songs. Sales were buoyed by the track's iTunes video premiere and its inclusion in the latest TV spot for DirecTV, shown frequently during the Major League Baseball playoffs on TBS and Fox. On the Billboard 200, the impact is also felt, where the album "The E.N.D." shoots up the tally with Pacesetter honors, vaulting 23-6 with 40,000 sold (up 56%).

"This Is It" by Michael Jackson featuring the Jacksons soars onto the Adult Contemporary airplay chart at No. 19, after the song's first week at radio.

The Jacksons return to the tally for the first time since 1970, when—billed as the Jackson 5—the group notched its sole previous entry, the No. 24-peaking "I'll Be There."

The late King of Pop ends a 13-year, seven-month and two-week absence from the chart. His last charted title, the No. 7-peaking "You Are Not Alone," wrapped a 26-week run on the March 16, 1996, list. "This Is It" is Jackson's 26th Adult Contemporary chart hit.

Jackson becomes the seventh solo male to score a top 20 Adult Contemporary song in each decade since the '70s, joining Eric Clapton, Elton John, Kenny Loggins, Paul McCartney, Rod Stewart and James Taylor.

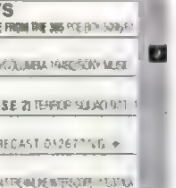
URBAN MAKES 'WAY'



Keith Urban's "Only You Can Love Me This Way" tops Hot Country Songs with 36.1 million impressions—his 11th No. 1 on that list—placing him in a tie for ninth place with Clint Black among artists with the most chart-toppers during the Nielsen BDS era (which began in January 1990). In the current decade, Urban moves to sole ownership of fifth place, breaking a tie with Rascal Flatts for the most No. 1s since January 2000. The new No. 1 is Urban's first since he spent the first of two weeks at the summit with "Sweet Thing" on the March 14 chart. —Wade Jessen

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

CALM BEFORE THE Q4 STORM

While Whitney Houston, Mariah Carey and Jay-Z have all notched No. 1s, Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums has been relatively quiet leading into the fourth quarter. Which isn't unusual, since labels hold back major releases until the holiday shopping season. Sales volume on the chart is down nearly 10% from last week despite top 10 debuts from Mario (No. 2) and Kevon Edmonds (No. 9), as well as albums from Snoop Dogg (No. 22) and DJ Khaled (No. 25).

Looking ahead, Michael Jackson's "This Is It," due Oct. 26, will certainly make an impact; Rihanna and 50 Cent will roll into Thanksgiving with their Nov. 23 releases; and December kicks off with albums from R. Kelly and Alicia Keys.

Yuridia earns her best ranking on Top Latin Pop Albums as "Nada Es De Color Rosa" debuts at No. 4, selling slightly more than 1,000 copies. Her prior best was the No. 5 peak of "Habia El Corazon" in the March 3, 2007, issue.

David Bisbal claims the top spot on Hot Latin Songs as "Esclavo De Sus Besos" rises 2-1 (13.6 million audience impressions, up 9%). It's his second No. 1 after the 2006 "Quien Me Iba A Decir" spent three weeks at the summit. "Esclavo" also jumps 10-4 on Latin Rhythm Airplay (2.1 million, up 42%).

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

GRUPO MANIA MANIA

The Puerto Rican merengue act Grupo Mania returns to the charts with its latest set, "Se Pego La Mania," debuting at No. 3 on Top Tropical Albums (selling slightly fewer than 1,000 copies). This marks the group's ninth top five debut, pushing it past Juan Luis Guerra & 440 for the most top five debuts by a group in the chart's 24-year history. "Se Pego" also debuts at No. 30 on Top Latin Albums.

Music Documentary Filmmakers Deserve A Break On Licensing Fees

BY STEVE GORDON

I believe in copyright and the right of artists and songwriters to make a decent living. But as a lawyer who represents the makers of music documentaries, I also believe that the owners of music copyrights should exercise greater flexibility when dealing with my clients.

Unlike feature films, which license music to enhance scenes, my clients often celebrate the music itself, and usually shoot their documentaries on limited budgets. Examples of recent projects I've worked with include "Big Pun: The Legacy," a documentary about the first Latin rapper to go platinum; "Let Freedom Sing," a movie celebrating the music that inspired the civil rights movement; "Punk Attitude," a survey about the punk era; "And You Don't Stop: 30 Years of Hip-Hop," a multipart series about the history of hip-hop for VH1; and two documentaries about Elvis Presley for network TV, "Elvis Lives" and "Elvis by the Presleys."

Because music documentaries can be an effective means of introducing new generations of audiences to legacy artists, labels and publishers should recognize that they're good for business. When I worked at Sony Music, Ken Burns' "Jazz" series on PBS spurred sales of our jazz catalog titles. For "Elvis by the Presleys," what was then known as Sony BMG released a companion CD because the label recognized the power of the documentary to move product.

But too often, owners of music copyrights fail to recognize the promotional value of such works, forcing producers of music documentaries to always weigh the value of using as much music as possible against the cost of doing so. Generally, labels and publishers charge less for use of their music in documentaries than in feature films because they know that documentary budgets are typically much smaller. But greater flexibility is needed.

Music documentaries can be an effective means of introducing new generations of audiences to legacy artists; labels and publishers should recognize that they're good for business.

Complicating matters is the fact that labels and publishers nearly always insist on "most favored nation" treatment, meaning that if the producers pay more money for one song, they must pay that higher amount to the owners of all the other songs in the film. Recently I was clearing the music rights for a documentary on the history of gospel music. Although most of the songs in the program were so old that they were in the public domain and didn't require payment, about a dozen other songs were still protected by copyright. One of them was more widely known than the others, but fortunately the song's owner agreed to license it at a reasonable rate. This was essential to the project because if the owner had asked for more, we would've had to pay the same amount for all the other non-public-domain songs, which would've exceeded our budget.

Under U.S. copyright law, producers of documentaries for PBS or other public broadcasting stations aren't obligated to pay for publishing rights or the use of master recordings for music they use in their works. Instead, PBS, with funding from the Corp. for Public Broadcasting, pays copyright owners the relevant licensing costs.

But this provision of U.S. law doesn't exempt PBS documentary producers from having to pay for the cost of licensing compositions and master recordings when their documentaries are released on DVD or in foreign territories. This is important because PBS stations often like to give away DVDs of music documentaries during pledge drives in return for contributions and filmmakers usually want options to distribute their work on foreign TV or other media to recoup production costs.

As a clearance professional, I always try to get the most reasonable rates and the most expansive rights for my clients' documentaries, even as I remain conscious and respectful of the value of the music as well. Publishers and labels, however, should recognize that these celebrations and histories of their music are great promotional tools and should enable documentary filmmakers to make the best work possible.

FOR THE RECORD

- An Oct. 3 review of Alicia Keys' latest single, "Doesn't Mean Anything," listed the incorrect title for that song as well as for her previous hit, "Superwoman."
- Ashley Jex is director of new media at Bill Silva Entertainment. A photo caption in the Oct. 24 issue misspelled her last name and listed an incomplete name for the company.
- A story in the Oct. 31 issue listed incorrect song titles for Mario's new album, "D.N.A."

>>STUDY: PIRATE BAY CLOSURE SLOWED PIRACY TEMPORARILY

The closure of the Pirate Bay disrupted global file sharing but volumes are recovering to previous levels, according to a white paper by DtecNet, a provider of piracy detection services. In "With Pirate Bay gone, Where have File Sharers gone?," the company describes a sudden, sharp decrease in BitTorrent traffic after the site closed and a gradual rise in the time since. According to DtecNet, file trading on the BitTorrent protocol dropped by nearly 80% Aug. 24, the day that Pirate Bay's service was cut.

>>VEVO LINKS WITH AT&T

The Vevo music video joint venture between Universal Music Group and Sony Music Entertainment has landed AT&T as one of its first advertising partners. Precisely how AT&T will integrate its branding into Vevo's services won't be clear until the service launches later this year, but the company says it will involve multiple platforms.

>>JUSTIN'S TEQUILA IS TO LIVE NATION'S TASTE

Live Nation inked a multiyear sponsorship deal with 901 Silver Tequila, which Justin Timberlake and Diab sponsors launched earlier this year. The deal makes 901 the official tequila sponsor of the majority of Live Nation's U.S. venues. As part of the deal, 901 gains the opportunity for ticket promotions, venue visibility and signage placement in venues.

Google's Enhanced Music Search Could Boost Artists And Digital Services

Search mission: Gathering to discuss Google's new music search service were (from left) MOS DEF; SYD SCHWARTZ, EMI Music senior VP of global digital marketing; WENDY NUSSBAUM, VP of business development for Universal Music Group's eLabs division; MIKE SHINODA of Linkin Park; STEVE SAVOCA of Domino Recording; and RYAN TEDDER of OneRepublic; inset: the pop-up music player that appears when Web surfers click on a song title in Google search results.

Google's new music search service has done something few Silicon Valley firms have been able to pull off in recent years—make record labels happy.

By supplementing its music-related search results with full-track streams from MySpace Music and Lala and links to authorized music services like imeem, Pandora and Rhapsody (Billboard.biz, Oct. 28), Google will not only provide the largest platform for music discovery on the Internet, it will drive traffic and revenue to these partners.

That's brought a smile to the faces of frustrated label executives who have licensed their music to these services, only to see them struggle to generate revenue.

What's more, Google is doing so without taking a dime from anyone—a rare development at a time when most digital music deals are forged under the threat of litigation or scuttled by the inability of the parties to come to terms.

"The business model for this one is to create a better search experience for our users," says R.J. Pittman, Google's director of project management. "There is no monetization accompanying this and no financial transactions."

Google isn't the first company to add streaming capabilities to search results. Yahoo has offered a similar Rhapsody-powered music sampling feature for more than a year, but sources familiar with the deal say it has had little impact on music sales or streams. Microsoft's MSN also used Rhapsody to power streaming music in search results for a short time in 2006.

But with 64.6% of the Internet search market, according to August figures from Nielsen MegaView Search, Google is considered the big win. Yahoo is a distant second at 16%, with MSN/Bing trailing at 10.7%.

Google already sends more Internet traffic to artist Web sites than any other single source, according to the Internet tracking firm Hitwise.

On average more than 28% of the traffic to all artist Web sites comes from Google. That's three times more than the second-ranking source, Yahoo Search, at 8%.

That explains why labels are excited about the Google initiative. While they've grappled for years with unauthorized music search engines like SeeqPod, only a relative handful of music fans knew about those music-specific search services. Google takes it to the mainstream, and it pays.

"Google is the biggest possible partner in search," says Syd Schwartz, EMI Music senior VP of global digital marketing. "There's a terrific commerce element involved here. Google's partnership with some of the more innovative online services, in addition to making sure there are buy buttons next to the streaming buttons, means we can address the fact that there are many different types of consumers out there that are interested in acquiring music in different ways. Removing any friction from the acquisition process works to our advantage."

Hand in hand with facilitating music discovery, the new search tool is expected to raise consumer awareness of the participating digital music services. According to Hitwise, Google is already responsible for driving 30% of the traffic on average to various digital music services. Heather Dougherty, director of research at Hitwise, says she expects that figure to increase.

"You would expect to see they would get an even higher share, because of the obvious placement," Dougherty says. "A lot of folks are going to Google looking for music or music content to begin with, so it serves as a natural aggregator for these services."

Lala ranks 70th among online music destinations, with 12% of that traffic coming from Google already, according to Hitwise. Lala founder Bill Nguyen predicts the combination of its Google and Facebook partnerships will drive its monthly unique visitor figures from 15 million per month to 140 million per month in a matter of weeks.

So what's in it for Google? It won't receive a cut of the transactions that result from music searches, nor is it requiring participating services to pay for being listed in search results.

Instead, Google expects to make money the way it always does: through text ads. By creating the best music search tool on the Internet, Google hopes to draw the lion's share of Web surfers searching for music online, as well as advertisers looking to reach those fans.

Expect to see labels and concert promoters to be among those lining up for ad buys. EMI's Schwartz says, "Given this new opportunity, we certainly will be taking a close look at how we can leverage this to maximum advantage." ••••

Synch And Swim

Downtown Music Launches Licensing And Branding Agency

Downtown Music, the parent company of Downtown Records, Downtown Music Publishing and Downtown Music Studios, is launching a strategic marketing agency to provide synch licensing and branding services to independent labels.

Dubbed Downtown Music Services, the agency will seek out licensing opportunities for indie music in film, TV, advertising, videogames and online communities.

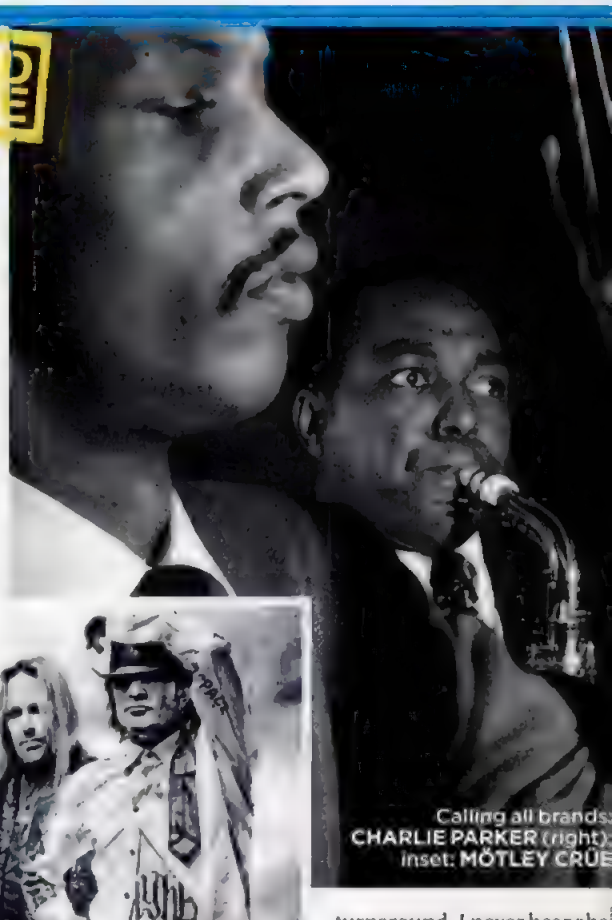
"The genesis for all of this was that we noticed a big hole in the licensing world," says Justin Kalifowitz, president of Downtown Music Publishing and a co-founder and head of DMS. "We were having a lot of success licensing our own artists [which include Kid Sister, Mos Def and Santigold], and our partner labels [including Dim Mak, Fool's Gold and Mad Decent] started to have an interest in working with us on this, and then the artists we publish wanted to have us handle their masters. We recognized this was a separate business and started working on the plan for DMS."

Kalifowitz adds that indie music has lacked a central licensing hub. "It's a fairly disparate community," he says. "A lot of small labels don't have the staff to pitch their music, and niche labels often don't do much licensing. DMS can offer both sides of the coin, doing both pitching and admin."

DMS has already had some success placing tracks, including licensing the use of the Prodigy song "Stand Up" in trailers for the upcoming Universal Pictures release "Repo Man," securing a synch in "Gossip Girl" for "Something We're Becoming" by Glow in the Dark Records artist Time Machine and licensing "Hello My Love" by Bonded Records' Cindy Santini for a Reese's ad campaign.

DMS' catalog includes more than 40,000 masters, including recordings by Charlie Parker, Frankie Goes to Hollywood and Mötley Crüe. Additionally, DMS represents a number of independent labels, including Downtown partner imprints and other labels like Eleven Seven and Cooking Vinyl. Finally, the catalog includes 10,000 song copyrights for tracks recorded by such acts as the Black Eyed Peas ("Meet Me Halfway") and Miley Cyrus ("See You Again," "Fly on the Wall" and "7 Things").

Kalifowitz says he envisions DMS serving as a one-stop-shop for music supervisors and ad agencies. This is possible, he adds, because in some cases DMS controls both the master recording and the underlying publishing rights. And in January 2010, DMS plans to launch an online platform that will let users license precleared tracks with one click.



Convenience is only part of the reason why Gabe McDonough, senior producer of music and integration at the ad agency DDB Worldwide, is excited about DMS. "Previously, I would go to Downtown Publishing for one thing, which was very cool, contemporary stuff," he says. "But with DMS, they're going to a whole other level. Now I can go to them for everything—Mötley Crüe, rerecords, you name it."

McDonough says the DMS process is "very simple and very streamlined, with really quick turnaround. I never hear abo any drama or ruffles."

Downtown Music Publis ing executives Jedd Katranc and Chad Greer have taken additional duties at DMS as of strategic marketing and of creative services, respective DMS also plans to add st as its catalog grows, Ka fowitz says.

"We just brought in anoth executive," he says, "so the bels will have a central conta in the DMS office."

DEE ANTHONY

Dee Anthony, an artist manager who shepherded the careers of Peter Frampton, Tony Bennett and Peter Allen and helped bring '60s U.K. rock acts to prominence in the United States, died Oct. 25 in Connecticut. He was 83 years old.

Born Anthony D'Addario, Anthony grew up in the Bronx and served in the U.S. Navy submarine force before returning home to pursue a career in the music industry. From 1949 to 1962, he served as personal manager to Bennett and then transitioned to managing U.K. artists in the United States, during which time he helped achieve stateside success for Traffic, Jethro Tull and King Crimson.

In 1968, Anthony leveraged that success and founded the global management company Bandana Enterprises with his brother, Bill. The two worked with acts including Joe Cocker, Humble Pie, the J. Geils Band, MC5, Ten Years After and Emerson, Lake & Palmer.

However, it was Frampton—a member of Humble Pie who went solo—who would become Anthony's greatest success story. Anthony began managing Frampton when he was just 18; when the singer/songwriter left Humble Pie in 1971, Anthony guided him through his first two albums.

Anthony emphasized to his acts the importance of developing their live performance to become a viable touring entity. In Frampton's case, a performance also became the key to album sales, in the form of the breakthrough 1976 double-album "Frampton Comes Alive." The set topped the Billboard 200, where it spent 10 weeks at No. 1, and also went to No. 1 on the year-end Top Billboard 200 albums chart. The success of "Frampton Comes Alive," which has sold 6 million copies, according to the RIAA, led to Anthony being honored as Billboard's manager of the year in 1976 and 1977.

In a "Day in the Life" profile in the Nov. 26, 1997, issue of Billboard, Anthony spoke of his and Frampton's bond. "Everyone says it's a father-son relationship. I don't know, maybe it is. Maybe he's the son I never had."

Anthony is survived by his wife, four daughters, two brothers and six grandchildren. His eldest daughter, Michele Anthony, followed in his footsteps to become president/COO at Sony Music and is now a consultant for acts including Pearl Jam, Prince and Björk.

"He guided and influenced my career enc mously," Michele says of her father. "He instilled me a passion and respect for artists and their mu . . . from the age of 5 I was constantly by his sid whether at the Copacabana, then later the Fillmo East or on the road with him and his bands. I had education that money just can't buy."

Anthony continued to manage several top ac in the '80s, including Devo, Peter Allen a Basia, before retiring from the music busine in the mid-'90s.

"Unless you can offer a performance, peop will just come to hear your last hit record and yo always be only as strong as that record," Antho told Billboard in 1977. "An act has to get to t point where his worst performance still has t audience captured."

Mobile Comes Alive

Still Early Days For Touring Business' Embrace Of Wireless Applications

Once upon a time, artists and live venues flirted with the idea of banning mobile phones from concerts, fearing that their ability to capture video and photos would undermine the exclusiveness of the event.

That idea never materialized. Today, mobile phones are recognized as essential tools that have transformed the live experience.

But it's time to expand the capabilities of the mobile handset. Artists, sponsors and promoters could all benefit from a more creative approach to mobile integration at live events, and not just with advanced devices like the iPhone.

Golden road: KEITH URBAN at a barbecue party in Nashville sponsored by KC Masterpiece and Kingsford Charcoal. Fans vied for a chance to attend the barbecue by sending a text message to Urban's Mozes mobile fan club.

For example, sending text messages to an onstage screen was a cute novelty at first, but there are other ways for artists to use texting beyond letting the audience express how much the band rules. The band Umphrey's McGee is one example: The group holds special Stew Art Series shows limited to 50 fans, where attendees can influence the playlist by texting ideas for the act to improvise on during an extended jam session.

According to longtime Umphrey's sound man Kevin Browning, who helped conceive and now manages the process, the group received more than 400 texts during the first Stew Art show Oct. 3 in Milwaukee. Next up are performances in Portland, Ore., and Washington, D.C., after which the band will assess what it learned and consider applying the concept to regular shows in the year ahead.

"A lot of our success today we owe to the fans, and mobile technology helps us better understand their wants and communicate in an intimate way," Browning says. "Using a mobile platform in this kind of circumstance gives the fans a sense of inclusion and involvement that's never been possible before. It really connects the band and an audience in a way that texting 'I love you' doesn't really do."

Acts could use the same feature to let fans submit requests or influence encores, or even create an ad-hoc music video from the action in the crowd.

Mobile technologies also enable sponsors to go beyond simply placing a banner near the stage and hosting a kiosk next to a venue's entrance. In today's economy, brands are seeking a return on investment that they can track. Incorporating mobile communications into their campaigns allows them to track engagement as well as build their mobile contact lists—just like artists do.

For example, during Keith Urban's Escape Together world tour this year, sponsors KC Masterpiece and Kingsford Charcoal backed a sweepstakes where fans could vie to win a barbecue featuring a performance by Urban by sending a text to the artist's Mozes mobile fan club. Each venue on the tour was decked out with banners and posters detailing how fans could get involved.

Such campaigns let fans choose to sign up for alerts and news from the sponsoring company as well as from the artist. Based on data collected from five nationwide tours for which Mozes provided text-messaging services, 17% of attendees responded to sponsor messages, while 9% opted to receive texts from the sponsor after the event.

"The engagement rates at shows are quite remarkable, so there is a proven desire on the part of the fan to participate," Mozes CEO Dorrian Porter says. "I don't believe you will be able to go to a concert in two years where mobile is not integrated into the show for the benefit of the artist, fan and sponsor."

And then there's mobile ticketing. The ability to send a ticket alert to fans' phones, allow them to buy a concert ticket through their handset and then send a bar code that can be scanned on the phone's screen the day of the event still accounts for only a tiny niche of the ticket market. For example, Derek Palmer, chief commercial officer at the online vendor and ticketing service provider Tickets.com, estimates that mobile tickets account for only a low single-digit percentage of the company's ticket sales. But Palmer says he expects a sharp increase in the next 12 months as more venues embrace the technology.

"It's been rather slow adopting," he says, "but we're starting to see some traction with the prevalence of smart-phone devices in the marketplace."

In the last year, Tickets.com has experienced a sevenfold increase in traffic to its mobile Web site, with about one-third of those visits resulting in the purchase of a ticket through a mobile phone on the day of an event.

But Palmer says it's up to innovative venues like the Royal Oak (Mich.) Music Theatre—which has a separate entrance for mobile ticketholders and grants them early entry—to help push the use of mobile ticketing beyond its 10% usage share.

These examples show that technology is no longer an impediment to adding new and creative mobile initiatives to the live experience. The challenge now is for the artists, managers, promoters and sponsors to become more innovative with the technology available to them. If touring is to make up for the decline in recorded-music revenue, then creativity shouldn't be limited to the music alone. ••••

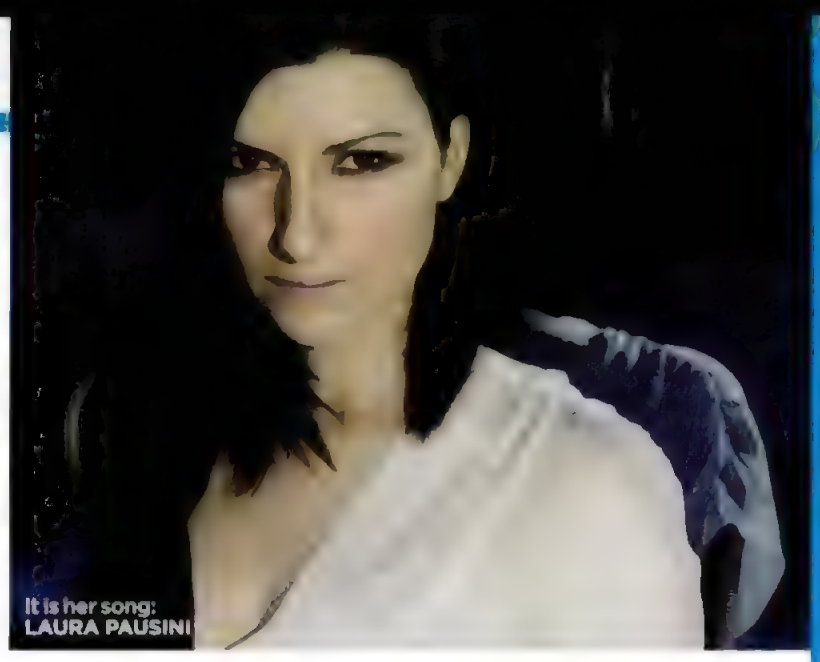
Here's Who We Think Will Take Home Latin Grammys This Year

As is our tradition, here are our annual predictions for the Latin Grammy Awards, which will be handed out Nov. 5 at the Mandalay Bay Events Center in Las Vegas. As always, our choices are based on past voting behavior and recent trends in the Latin music market.

ALBUM OF THE YEAR: Calle 13 member René Pérez's profane rant against regional political leaders during the MTV Latin American Awards came after the Oct. 12 close of voting for the Latin Grammys. That means Calle 13 still has a shot at scoring album of the year for "Los de Atrás Vienen Conmigo." Then again, Mercedes Sosa's death just one week before voting closed makes her a possible winner, out of respect and appreciation for "Cantora 1."



SONG OF THE YEAR: The winner has to be the continental hit "Aquí Estoy Yo," written by Luis Fonsi, Claudia Brant and Gen Rubin for Fonsi's album "Palabras del Silencio." The only other contender here is "Yo No Sé Mañana," penned by Jorge Luis Piloto and Jorge Villamizar for Luis Enrique. Although a smash stateside, the song is just starting to hit big in other countries.

RECORD OF THE YEAR: "Aquí Estoy Yo" will probably win in this category as well, but Laura Pausini's "En Cambio No" has a shot too, given its beauty and its hit status in many markets.

BEST NEW ARTIST: We love it when this category is hotly contested, but—alas—it rarely is. Among this year's impressive list of nominees, the winner will be Alexander Achá, who has the most name recognition in different countries. Luz Ríos, who can sing and write, is a deserving nominee who is, unfortunately, little-known outside the United States.

PRODUCER OF THE YEAR: Nominees Sergio George and Cachorro López have both won this award before. This year, due to sheer output as well as his impeccable handling of multiple genres, the honor should go to Aureo Baqueiro.

BEST POP DUO OR GROUP ALBUM: This is a hotly contested category with a major Spanish component. Our bet is with La Quinta Estación, which straddles Spain and Mexico and whose "Sin Frenos" is one of the most beautiful—and commercially successful—albums of the year.

BEST MALE POP VOCAL ALBUM: Who's glaringly absent among the nominees? Luis Fonsi, whose "Palabras del Silencio" would have won hands down. Given the Latin Recording Academy's inexplicable failure to nominate him in this category, our vote goes to Fito Paez's "No Se Si Es Baires o Es Madrid," which was accompanied by a region-wide tour.

BEST URBAN MUSIC ALBUM: While many people might be quick to dismiss reggaetón (or the music it's evolved into) and back Calle 13, our bet is on Wisin & Yandel's "La Revolución," a hard-worked, hard-earned album that has great hit singles.

BEST TROPICAL SONG: Notwithstanding the success of "El Amor" by Tito "El Bambino," the song of the year was "Yo No Sé Mañana," performed by Luis Enrique. And Enrique's album "Ciclos" will nab best salsa album as well.

BEST SINGER/SONGWRITER ALBUM: Now this is a hot category. Will Franco De Vita finally get a long-deserved Latin Grammy with "Simplemente La Verdad"? Probably not, although the beauty of his album and his decision to invite emerging singer/songwriters to tour with him this year should make him a shoo-in. "Zi e Zie" by Caetano Veloso, a past winner in this category, will likely prevail over "Simplemente" and Ricardo Arjona's "5o Piso," another gem. ••••

THE BILLBOARD ¿Q&A?

Although Omara Portuondo's Latin Grammy Award-nominated "Gracias" (Producciones Montuno) was released in the United States in 2008, she wasn't able to tour stateside in support of the album until now. Like other Cuban singers, Portuondo, best-known as one of the stars of the "Buena Vista Social Club" album, had been barred from performing in the States since 2003, when the administration of President George W. Bush tightened visa regulations.

Her recent shows in Los Angeles and San Francisco mark the start of what is expected to be a new wave of Cuban artist performances in the United States. The 79-year-old singer recently spoke with Billboard about "Gracias" and her tour.

Was it upsetting for you to be kept out of the United States?

Yes. The first time I came here to perform was in 1951, and I came many times after that. In Cuba, I also met so many American artists, like Nat "King" Cole, Sarah Vaughan, Stan Kenton. I used to sing "Stormy Weather," and later I met Lena Horne. For musical reasons that don't hurt anyone and only make people happy, I wanted to come here again.

Is "Gracias" a retrospective of your career?

I tried to include styles that people who only know me from "Buena Vista Social Club" might not know I sing and that are part of our Cuban culture: filin, African rhythms, songs by Pablo Milanés and Silvio Rodríguez. Jorge Drexler wrote the song "Gracias."

Is there a song on the album that's particularly special for you?

I recorded a Cuban lullaby, "Drume Negrita." My father sang it to me when I was a baby, and I sang it to my children and granddaughter.

You're best-known in Cuba as a member of the filin movement.

It was started by a group of young people in Havana who were influenced by the traditional Cuban trova [folk] and also Tommy Dorsey and other big bands who would play in Havana. When we heard a good song we'd say, "Hey, that song has feeling," and that's how the movement got its name.

Most of the musicians who recorded "Buena Vista Social Club" have passed away in recent years. Do you worry about the legacy of Cuban music?

No, young people in Cuba are interested in what came before them, like we were. Today, the most popular music is reggaetón, but the young artists are mixing it with Cuban rhythms from the past.

What's ahead for you?

I think I still have a lot left to do. If an interesting project comes up and they invite me, I'll do it. Music gives you peace, it gives you happiness. And through music, you can remember all of the interesting things that happened to you in your own life.

LEGAL MATTERS

DISSECTING THE COURT RULING AGAINST RINGTONES AS 'PUBLIC PERFORMANCES'

by BEN SHEFFNER

Though sales of ringtones appear to have peaked, they remain a multibillion-dollar business globally.

So it isn't surprising that record labels, music publishers, mobile carriers and ringtone aggregators are still vying for as large a slice of the pie as they can grab. And that has led to inevitable fights over how copyright law, written decades before ringtones ever existed, applies to this technology.

The performing rights society ASCAP—and the publishers, composers and songwriters it represents—lost a key round in this battle when a federal judge in New York ruled Oct. 14 that the use of a ringtone that plays copyrighted music doesn't count as a "public performance" for which a license fee is required.

Much of the press coverage of the decision portrayed publishers as greedy Luddites seeking to stick their fingers in the pockets of consumers every time their phones ring. But as with all digital music licensing, the issues are a lot more complicated than they appear.

Mobile carriers like Verizon Wireless and AT&T sell ringtones directly to their subscribers. When customers purchase a ringtone, the song file is downloaded onto their handsets, where it remains as long as they keep paying their monthly bill. Then, when the subscriber receives a call, the provider sends a signal to the handset, telling it to play the ringtone, which anyone within earshot can hear.

So who gets paid and how much? Upon the initial download of a ringtone there's no question that the publisher is entitled to a mechanical royalty of 24 cents per song for use of the composition—a huge premium over the 9.1-cent mechanical rate for a full-track download. For "mastertone" ringtones that use a snippet of an actual master recording, the label gets paid as well; these rates are individually negotiated.

The ASCAP case addressed related but murkier questions: Is the publisher also entitled to a performance royalty when the song file is transmitted to the handset? And is it entitled to yet another performance royalty when the phone rings, thereby playing a snippet of music?

U.S. District Court Judge Denise Cote answered "no" to both questions. Regarding the initial download from the cell provider to the handset, Cote relied heavily on a 2007 decision (now on appeal) by a different federal judge involving a music download service operated by AOL, which held that a transmission doesn't qualify as a performance unless it is designed for "contemporaneous perception" by the listener. Thus a radio broadcast and playing music in a nightclub are public performances that require payment to performing rights societies like ASCAP, BMI and SESAC. The download of a song file to a computer or a cell phone, where the consumer doesn't simultaneously hear the music, is not, Cote ruled.

> Is the publisher entitled to a performance royalty when the song is transmitted to the handset? And is it entitled to another when the phone rings?

Trickier still is the question regarding whether a mobile carrier must pay when a phone rings playing a song snippet. ASCAP argued that music playing in a public place fits the standard definition of a public performance, no different from when a song plays in a restaurant or a store. As an amicus brief filed by BMI and SESAC argued, when a ringtone plays, "members of the public are momentarily entertained, and the songwriter is entitled to be compensated for that performance of his or her work."

But Cote held that even when a ringtone plays in a public place, it isn't a public performance because of a provision in the U.S. Copyright Act exempting performances where there isn't a "purpose of direct or indirect commercial advantage." Because the mobile carrier doesn't receive an additional fee each time the ringtone plays, Cote ruled that the rings themselves are not commercial and that the carrier doesn't owe any additional royalties to the publishers.

Most mobile carriers pay performing rights societies for ringtones until the 2009 download decision. And unless Cote's decision is overturned on appeal, it will likely shut off the performance spigot for good. In a music world full of shrinking pies, that's not news the industry wanted to hear.

China's Online Crackdown Could Boost Anti-Piracy Efforts

TAIPEI, Taiwan—China's online music community is preparing to meet new government requirements that could help fight piracy but also raise the specter of increased censorship.

In September, China's Ministry of Culture issued a circular requiring online music "disseminators" to submit translations of all foreign song lyrics for approval by Dec. 31. The ministry considers international repertoire and music from Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macau as "foreign."

The ministry said in the circular that it will prohibit services from offering uncleared songs as part of measures aimed at addressing "vulgar content" and the market's "lack of supervision and regulation."

The requirement covers search engines like Baidu and Yahoo China, which "deep-link" to unauthorized music sites. Gary Chen, chief executive of the digital music retailer Top100.cn, calls that "a very positive move."

Previously, the Chinese government had said that "if [an online service] links to music from illegitimate sites, it's fine," Chen says, adding that under the new directive, "whether you're a search engine or a download music site, you must link to legitimate sites."

The requirements will affect vast swathes of catalog. Top100cn has deals with 7,000 labels—including the majors—for international and domestic repertoire and provides streaming content to Google China.

The Chinese government has "drawn a line in the sand," says Mathew Daniel, VP of the digital music distributor R2G.net. "Now it's a question of how strongly they impose it."

R2G.net operates China's Wawawa online music store, which has deals with the aggregator the Independent Online Distribution Alliance and what Daniel describes as "thousands" of international and domestic indie labels.

According to the IFPI, China had 298 million Internet users in 2008. But while physical releases faced censors' checks, online music was hitherto largely unregulated. That's because "the government doesn't know whether to classify it as commerce or content," says analyst Tian Hou at Pali Research in New York.

Under the existing system, albums can be banned for political content, sexual references and obscenity.

"Everyone in Taiwan knows how far you can push the limit [in China]," says Sam Duann, president of the Taipei-based independent label Rock Records, which claims to have the most extensive catalog of Mandarin hits in the region and operates a music download site in China (RockMobile.com).

He singles out the rapper MC HotDog, renowned for expletive-laden lyrics and biting social commentary, as an artist unlikely to gain clearance. While accessible on unauthorized sites in China, HotDog's music isn't legally available. "We've pretty much given up on him [there]," Duann says.

Representatives at the Ministry of Culture didn't respond to requests for comment. In a reflection of the sensitivity surrounding censorship issues in China, major labels declined to comment.

If enforcement efforts reduce the number of links to unauthorized product, it could level the playing field between Baidu—widely credited as hosting 70% of China's search engine traffic—and Google, which has an estimated 24%, Hou says.

"Google is really good at searching for music," she says, "but Baidu's better at connecting users with a wide variety of 'free' entertainment."

The music industry has had several clashes with Baidu, but Hou says it's unlikely to end its deep-linking practices despite the circular.

"This regulation is difficult to enforce," she says. "What [the culture ministry] wants is for corporations to self-censor."

May-Seey Leong, the IFPI's Asia regional director, acknowledges that "record companies are already careful about what they release in China—to a certain extent, they already self-censor."

Despite the new policy's anti-piracy potential, Leong notes that Chinese authorities have previously made little progress on that front.

"It would be great if this meant the Ministry of Culture would step up enforcement," Leong says. "But based on their track record, I'm not overly optimistic." ••••

Kenyan Artists Look To Capitalize On MTV Africa Music Awards Wins

AIROBI, Kenya—When Kenya's ameless picked up the best male artist ward Oct. 10 at the MTV Africa Music wards, even the security guards hooped along with the 4,000 music ns filling Nairobi's Moi International orts Complex.

Then, when the pop singer's track Sunshine" also won the Listener's hoice Award and Kenya's Afro-pop nger Amani was named best male, the audience's celebration as unrestrained.

"I was praying for a win because of e home crowd," Nameless says. "I re- ly went out there, on radio, on Face- ook to motivate people to vote—to be e host [country] and have no wins ould have been disastrous."

The three wins at the MTV Africa usic Awards—or MAMAs, as they're own—provided a welcome diversion r the former British colony, which suf- red violent political upheaval follow- g disputed presidential elections in ecember 2007. They also provided a oment in the spotlight for Kenya's racy-ravaged recording industry, hich is hoping to capitalize on the vis- ility to reach a broader audience.

Nameless says he's looking to record material that appeals to audiences beyond East Africa—"less Swahili, less focus on local issues but still keeping the Nameless sound." And Amani says she's already fielding increased offers for endorsements and live work.

"The most important thing for me right now is to market myself more in Africa," she says. "Winning means it's much easier to maximize radio play or live bookings on the continent and seek distribution in countries like South Africa."

Bahrain-based Norman Moyo, group marketing director of strategic programs at MAMAs headline sponsor Zain, says the mobile phone operator is working on plans to improve access to award winners' music through its portals.

Zain, he says, is considering a pan-African MAMAs tour and has also struck a deal with the aggregator Inmobia for MAMAs-associated music content.

MTV claims a potential audience of 1 billion for the MAMAs through its global network and terrestrial TV partnerships in Africa. Nameless' "Sunshine" and Amani's "Tonight" have just been added to the Pan-African channel MTV Base's "hot recurrent" playlist and both have tracks featured in the channel's new drama series "Shuga."

MTV is also concluding a distribution deal for a MAMAs winners CD release in Kenya, Nigeria and South Africa, giving the Kenyan acts on the disc a rare opportunity to be heard outside their homeland.

At home, the MAMAs have generated "an unprecedented buzz around our artists," says Nairobi-based Homeboyz Radio presenter Corrine Onyango. She reports a change in listener requests from the likes of Lil Wayne and Jay-Z to artists like the Kenyan female rapper (and best new act nominee) STL.

Arthur Kamau, a Nairobi-based independent TV producer who has helmed the music shows "The Stomp" and "The Beat" for the Kenyan channel NTV, says domestic acts benefited from sharing a platform with international stars like Akon and host Wyclef Jean, who spoke during his visit of his interest in collaborating with African artists.

Although international acts remain popular in Kenya, they rarely perform here. But, Kamau says, "Wyclef and Akon's good experience here is likely to open doors for international acts to visit Nairobi."

Kenyan artists estimate that about 90% of domestic music sales are of pirated product in street markets. Kenyan artists typically self-release their music, which is also available through some stores in major metropolitan markets.

"It's been a while since I recorded a full-length album," Amani says. "The high piracy rate means it's just not worthwhile putting albums out. I'd rather focus on recording new songs that can be played on radio or turned into videos—[driving] the endorsements and live work."

Nameless runs his own label Alternative Concepts and, like most performers, handles his own publishing and mobile deals. "We're finally seeing income flow from ringtone and ringback sales," he says.

Meanwhile, live shows are a key source of income for local artists. Kenya's live circuit centers around club shows and occasional festivals, where hip-hop and urban music are hugely popular, as are domestic genres like Swahili pop. Acts like Wahu, Nameless and Amani incorporate Swahili pop elements into their songs, mixing Swahili and English-language lyrics.

Demand for young, urban-based home-grown artists has grown steadily in the past decade, says Nairobi-based magazine columnist/broadcaster Olivia Otieno. That, she says, has fostered the development of "world class" artists like Nameless and Wahu. "Now's the time," Otieno says, "for the rest of the world to experience our music." ••••

THREE KENYAN ACTS TO WATCH

WAHU

Based: Nairobi
Current release: "Sweet Love" (Alternative Concepts)
Booking agent: Self-booked

Singer Wahu Kagwi confirmed her standing as a standard-bearer for her country's pop scene by becoming the sole Kenyan winner at the inaugural MTV Africa Music Awards (MAMAs) ceremony last year in Abuja, Nigeria. Nominated this year for best video (for "Little Things You Do," featuring Uganda's Bobi Wine), Wahu performed at the ceremony with Amani and Tanzanian artist A.Y. Her "ability to connect emotionally and personally with her fans" is what ensures Wahu stands out, says Nairobi-based music TV producer Arthur Kamau. She further enhanced her celebrity status with her 2005 marriage to fellow artist David Mathenge, aka Nameless. Both record for Nameless' Alternative Concepts label and are keen to move their careers into new territories on the African continent and beyond.

AMANI

Based: Nairobi
Current release: "Tamani" (Ogopo DJs)
Booking agent: Self-booked (Kenya); Kampala, Uganda-based Talent 256 (outside Kenya)

A string of urban/dance-leaning pop songs from her album "Tamani" have scored Amani major radio chart action in Kenya. Her best female artist win at the MAMAs, together with Nameless' best male artist award, revived memories of "Ninanoki" (Ogopo DJs), the enduringly popular duet the pair released in 2002. "Amani is all about fun," Kamau says. "She gets Kenyans dancing and smiling with upbeat and infectious songs." Like Wahu and Nameless, Amani sings in a mixture of Swahili and English. "I want to represent African pop music all over the world," she says, "because it has such a different flavor that people are really starting to relate to."

STL

Based: Nairobi/Oslo
Current release: "Living for Music" (STLMUSIC)
Booking agent: Self-booked (Africa); Norway-based ArtistPartner (outside Africa)

A best new act nominee at the MAMAs, the Queen Latifah-inspired rapper Stella Mwangi—aka STL—moved to Norway with her parents in 1991 but has retained an intimate connection with her African roots. She has recorded with the Senegalese hip-hop group Wagable, rapped about the joy of going back to Kenya on "Take It Back" (from her debut album, "Living for Music") and released "Biacara Ni Biacara," her first song in Kenya's Kikuyu dialect, in June. "I'm so glad STL was nominated for a MAMA," says Corrine Onyango, a DJ at the Nairobi-based Homeboyz Radio. "She hit the scene here with force about a year ago and really represents a new generation of Kenyan music." —DC

Matt Murphy

KLEINER PERKINS CAUFIELD & BYERS PARTNER

The manager of the iFund, which invests in iPhone app developers, discusses music's appeal in the surging mobile app market.

Several months before Apple opened its App Store in July 2008, the venerable Bay Area venture capital firm Kleiner Perkins Caufield & Byers launched the iFund, a $100 million investment vehicle focused on backing companies developing applications for the iPhone and the iPod Touch. The fund is a collaboration with Apple: Kleiner Perkins contributes funding and Apple provides marketing support for the resulting apps.

After investing in a variety of social networking, utility and communications companies, in October the iFund finally made its first bet on a music-related application: the song-identification company Shazam. With more than 50 million users, Shazam is one of the few iPhone apps that has maintained its high ranking in the App Store download charts and its monthly usage rates.

Matt Murphy, the Kleiner Perkins partner who manages the iFund, says he expects Shazam to expand deeper into mobile music sales, advertising, recommendations and even other types of content as the audience for mobile entertainment expands in the years ahead.

Murphy, who's been with Kleiner Perkins since 1999, serves as either director or adviser for all the companies that receive an investment from the iFund. He recently spoke with Billboard about the investment in Shazam, the state of digital music services and why startups are better off launching on mobile phones instead of on the Internet.

What sparked your interest in Shazam?

If you think about what companies have been around for the year-and-a-half since the App Store launched and are really popular, there's really only a handful because so many come out, and people find them interesting for a few days, and then disappear. But Shazam has been one of those consistently high-ranking apps like Pandora and Facebook that everybody seems to love. People love the action of tagging a song in real time, the delight of seeing what it is and then the ability to buy it in real time or share with friends. As much as anything, they defined a widely used use case that people are loyal to. To build an iconic brand around that is very hard to do and very few companies have done it.

So what's the future opportunity for Shazam?

It's basically getting into a more holistic experience around music. Broader forms of discovery, recommendation, music management and even moving beyond music into all different forms of entertainment.

How important are the new in-app purchase and subscription capabilities for the iPhone in terms of driving new business models for mobile apps?

It's terrific that Apple has listened to its constituents of developers who said they need more ways to monetize . . . this free-to-pay model we've seen as being very successful. You need to make it so the masses can do whatever they want for free, but those who want additional or more functionality will be able to pay. Maximizing the number of ways that this vibrant developer community can make money is really important, and Apple has responded. In 2010, we're going to see a lot of much more scalable companies emerge from a revenue perspective, and that has us really excited.

You've only invested in one music-related service. Why?

You take a look across the categories we think are important—social networking, communications, games, entertainment, utilities—there's a wide landscape of things to invest in. Frankly, our model generally is to invest in one company in a category and go really long on that and make that the biggest winner. So if we feel there's an adjacent opportunity in music, instead of funding another company to do that, we try to make it so Shazam can subsume that opportunity as well. That's how you build the largest company, by carving off as much of the value proposition as you can.

As the music industry focuses more on mobile apps, what features should they focus on?

Partnering with Tapulous for "Tap Tap Revenge" and coming out with artist-specific versions of that. There's the T-Pain app with Smule. I think we're going to see a lot of [artist-centered apps]. You can get some short-term pops and monetization out of that. It probably breaks down if you have 50 versions of the same app, each with different artists. But we're in a stage right now where everybody is trying to experiment. The music industry is trying to monetize all these digital assets on mobile, and mobile developers are basically experimenting with their apps by bringing content into it. So it's early days.

I kind of like the fact that people on both sides are being experimental. And ultimately things will shake out of that where people are doing things that are more strategic, durable and long-lasting. I can't predict what that will be right now, but I do believe the combination of applications, functionality and content is here to stay. Doing that in ways that increase the value of the application is good for the app developers and good for the music industry.

Are venture capital dollars starting to loosen up again for music services?

It would be hard for me to say that dollars are loosening up for music, but they are being loosened up for mobile. You look within mobile and ask what one of the absolute hit use cases on mobile is going to be. People love music and people love to take music with them wherever they go. They like to discover music and socialize around music. So that's going to be a hit area. If I think of the big five application opportunities, music is one of them.

Are developers then better off focusing on a mobile app than on Internet-based services?

Mobile is the new platform. When there are platform disruptions, there's always opportunity. For the companies that are there first as the platform evolves and come up with a hit use case and application that creates a large audience, the rewards will generally accrue to that class of company. Music on the Internet is a minefield that has been battled for several years. So any time you're thinking about a new service, think about where the green field opportunity is. The one benefit of the Web, of course, is that it has 10 times the users of the mobile Web right now. That's going to change meaningfully in the next couple of years. But in that environment, you have to have something that's just so different from everything that's out there. Mobile is an easier platform to win that initial audience.

Do you have any plans to launch a fund for the app stores from iPhone competitors like Android and BlackBerry?

The way we're looking at it right now is that the best entrepreneurs and the most popular applications will be built on the iPhone and then look to expand their distribution to other platforms. We don't dictate what platforms companies are on, but I do think the iPhone will be the best experience.

If you could give one piece of advice to labels as they look to monetize digital music, what would it be?

I would say be really flexible and be really experimental. It's early days. We don't want to cut off anything that would stifle the innovation we've seen all around us. This platform is set to explode two to three times a year on the iPhone alone, four to five times a year across all platforms. The [mobile pie] is going to be so much bigger. Right now, we should all maximize our learnings, and we can tighten up the models over time. Unless we're all more open and experimental, we're not going to learn what's going to work and what's not going to work. ••••

LIL WAYNE'S LAST TOUR ENERATED $39 MILLION— AND SET THE STAGE FOR HIP-HOP ACTS TO BOOST TOURING REVENUE

BY MITCHELL PETERS

The week after the June 2008 release of "Tha Carter III," Lil Wayne performed a sold-out concert at the 1,000-capacity House of Blues on the Sunset Strip in Los Angeles.

Along with the sellout, the New Orleans rapper had something else to celebrate—he had just become the first artist since 50 Cent in 2005 to sell more than 1 million copies of an album in a single week. Those who attended the House of Blues concert remember it as a "madhouse," says Paul McGuigan, the club's talent buyer. "I've never seen anything like that."

The raucous scene included crazed fans attempting to get in through fake windows on the rooftop—and by scaling the fences next door. "I turned away tons of people," McGuigan says. "Everybody wanted to be inside and part of the show that night."

At the time, Lil Wayne was no stranger to the stage. But even though the rapper had performed live since his early teenage years, he had traded in a heavy touring schedule for sporadic—but lucrative—club dates or one-off radio show concerts. So it was a surprise to some when Lil Wayne returned to L.A. seven months after the House of Blues show and sold more than 23,000 tickets to back-to-back concerts at the Gibson Amphitheatre. The shows grossed $877,345.

Historically, hip-hop artists have relied mostly on album sales to sustain their careers; rap acts that release platinum-selling albums rarely see the same success in concert. For example, since 2006, T.I. has released two albums that have sold more than 1 million copies, but only eight of his concert grosses have been reported to Billboard Boxscore.

But as sales continue to decline—through the week ending Oct. 18, album sales were down 13% in 2009 compared with the same point last year, according to Nielsen SoundScan—more rappers are taking a serious look at touring as part of their long-term strategy. "They don't have the income coming from big record labels," says Peter Schwartz, a booking agent at the Agency Group who represents acts like Method Man, Redman, De La Soul, Raekwon, Ghostface Killah, Immortal Technique and Del Tha Funky Homosapien. "So they go on the road, play live and sell merch."

McGuigan has seen this firsthand at the club and theater level. "There's far more hip-hop touring now than there was even two years ago, and 100 times more than there was 10 years ago," he says. "Ten years ago, hip-hop acts just didn't tour."

Fueled by the success of "Tha Carter III"—it has sold 3.3 million copies in the United States, according to SoundScan, and spawned seven Billboard Hot 100 hits, including three top 10s—Lil Wayne put on what became the most lucrative rap tour in the history of Billboard Boxscore. And the lessons of that tour, especially the decisions to focus on his showmanship and present diverse supporting acts, could be useful to anyone in hip-hop.

"You have to perform every night and you have to execute every night," Lil Wayne says. "You build it and they will come."

WAYNE'S GAME

In 2008 and 2009, Lil Wayne's I Am Music and America's Most Wanted arena and amphitheater tours grossed $39 million in North America and drew more than 724,000 fans to 68 concerts, according to Billboard Boxscore. Ticket prices for the I Am Music trek cost $40-$159, and tickets for the America's Most Wanted jaunt ranged from $29.99 to $150.

"I received positive feedback on the grosses, but more so on the amount of shows that we played," says Sports & Entertainment Financial Group president Shawn Gee, who also serves as Lil Wayne's tour producer and tour business manager. "It was amazing that we did the amount of shows that we did domestically over a short period of time."

The numbers will likely earn Lil Wayne a spot on Billboard's year-end list of the top 25 grossing tours, a rare feat for a hip-hop artist. The most recent rap act to land on the year-end tally was Jay-Z, whose 2008 co-headlining trek with Mary J. Blige ranked No. 21.

The gross from Lil Wayne's tour (which started Dec. 14, 2008, and wrapped Sept. 6) tops Jay-Z's jaunt with Blige, which grossed $34.5 million and drew 310,694 concertgoers to 27 shows, and Kanye West's 2008 Glow in the Dark tour, which pulled in $30.8 million from 49 concerts that attracted 507,853 fans, according to Billboard Boxscore.

After seeing how well West and Jay-Z did on the road, Lil Wayne's management team knew there was money to be made from concerts, especially given the momentum behind "Tha Carter III." Unlike those acts, however, Wayne hadn't yet established himself as a large-scale venue headliner in the eyes of concert promoters.

So last fall, the rapper's camp recruited Gee, who is no stranger to ambitious rap tours. His first step was to book a support package that would appeal to all musical segments of the rapper's fan base, including devotees of R&B, pop and alternative rock. He divided the tour into three legs that featured support on various dates from Keyshia Cole, T-Pain, Gym Class Heroes, Keri Hilson, Young Jeezy, Drake, Soulja Boy Tell'Em, Jeremih and Pleasure P.

"It was the mixture [of musical genres] that allowed for the package to work, because Wayne has a potpourri fan base," Gee says. "You have to make sure the consumer not only connects with the headliner in the package, but the entire package as a whole."

The same strategy worked for West's Glow in the Dark tour, which featured Rihanna, N*E*R*D and Lupe Fiasco. Eminem and 50 Cent's 2005 co-headlining jaunt featured support from Lil Jon & the Eastside Boyz, G-Unit, D12, Obie Trice and Stat Quo. The latter tour cracked Billboard's year-end list of the top 25 tours, grossing $21.2 million and drawing nearly 326,000 fans to 21 shows, according to Billboard Boxscore.

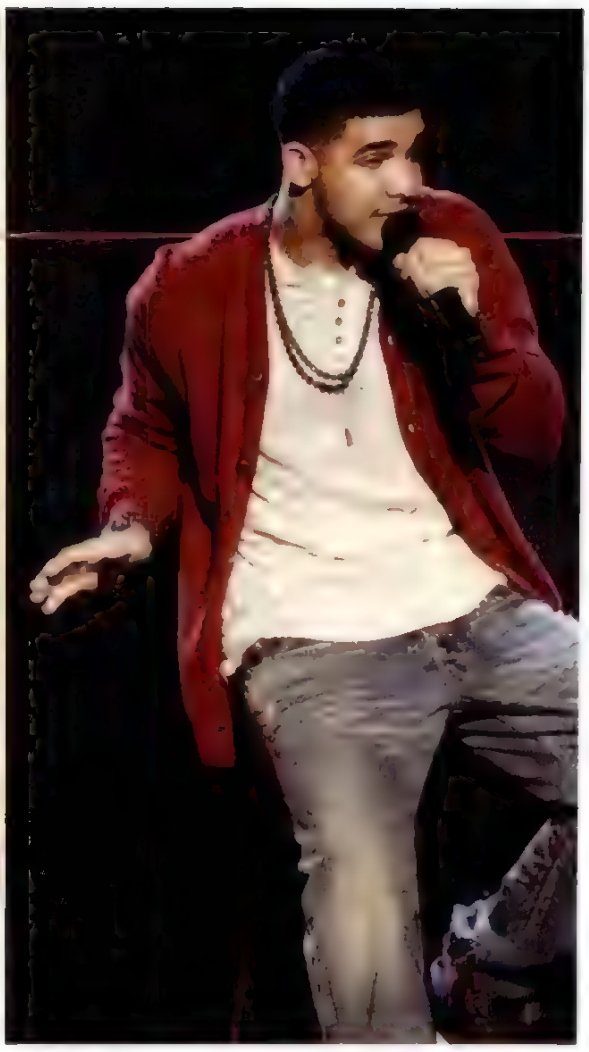
Gee also found Lil Wayne an experienced road crew. During the tour's planning stages, Gee says venue execs and promoters had a "negative perception" of Lil Wayne as a touring act. To put their minds at ease, he surrounded the rapper with veterans who previously worked on outings for West, Eminem and Beyoncé.

"They were experienced in moving large tours from a production side, a security side and a tour management side," he says. "So it made the marketplace comfortable, but it also helped with the efficiency of the tour as well."

FOLLOWING MR. CARTER

Lil Wayne's success on the road may not have been possible without the accomplishments of Jay-Z, whose decade-plus touring career is "the blueprint of what we wanted to do with our own clients," according to Hip Hop Since 1978 CEO Gee Roberson, who manages West and co-manages Lil Wayne.

Jay-Z, now signed to a multirights deal with Live Nation, is the only rapper headlining arenas without the support of another big act. He's currently playing North American college arenas through November, with openers N*E*R*D, Wale and J. Cole. Additional dates are planned for February and March 2010, according to Live Nation senior VP of touring Faisel Durrani.



Jay-Z has paid his dues on the road since the '90s, teaming up on various tours with Blige, DMX, R. Kelly, 50 Cent and others. "You can't ignore his history," Gee says. "Jay-Z's team has been great at developing him as a live artist, and he's reached the point where he can go out and headline without a big package."

Lil Wayne's team hopes to bring their artist to the same level. But Gee admits they may not get there on the rapper's next tour. "Packaging will always be important," he says. "Will you need as many artists to support, or as high-profile artists to support? Obviously, the goal is no. The goal is to provide a great show where you don't have to overspend on support."

Lil Wayne's future now holds some uncertainty, since the rapper in late October pled guilty to attempted weapon possession that could land him a one-year prison sentence. Gee and Roberson declined to comment on how that would affect touring plans, but Gee believes Wayne's next tour will again visit large-sized venues in North America (see story, page 22). Lil Wayne is expected to be sentenced in February, two months after the planned Dec. 15 release of his new album, "Rebirth."

Wayne, West, Jay-Z, 50 Cent and Eminem are among the few hip-hop artists who have graduated to arena-level status, since tours at this level require heavy radio play and a marquee co-headliner or support package. Industry executives also blame the lack of viable hip-hop headliners on artists' decision to cash in on lucrative one-off gigs instead of developing a touring base.

That's a rap: JAY-Z performs at KPWR Los Angeles' Powerhouse concert Aug. 8 at the Honda Center in Anaheim, Calif.; right: DRAKE performs at the BET Awards June 28 in Los Angeles.

"Some of these acts are knocking down $20,000-$50,000 to do a club—they roll in, walk onstage, do 30-40 minutes and they're done," says Jeff Sharp, VP of urban touring at AEG Live/Atlanta Worldwide Touring. "They can afford to do two shows a week and they end up netting more than they could ever do going out and doing the arena business."

Gee says that "most hip-hop artists don't necessarily know how to tour what level of commitment it takes to build a touring career." Others say the genre's singles-driven nature makes it hard for acts to stay in the spotlight long enough to cultivate a fan base that can support arena tours. "The guy who's hot today might not be hot at all three months from now," McGuigan says. "It's hard to plan five years from now when you have a single that's currently hot on the radio and that's how you're getting booked."

Most executives agree that nonstop touring is the only way to build a lasting live career, which could require sacrificing attractive one-off paychecks for lower-paying support slots. "That takes a certain mentality of saying, 'I'm going to take this hit, because I know I'm performing in front of 30,000-plus people per night and that in turn is going to open the door for me to have my own tour one day,' " Roberson says. Early on in West's career, he notes, the artist was turning down attractive single-show engagement offers to open concerts for Mos Def, Usher, U2 and the Rolling Stones.

DRAKE'S GOT NEXT

Will the success of Lil Wayne's tour encourage up-and-coming rappers to hone their live shows? For now, Roberson and Gee are focusing their efforts on newcomer Drake, who will promote the release of his upcoming album next year with a North American headlining tour of small clubs and theaters. "The good thing about Drake is that he loves to perform live and he's willing to put in the necessary work to build a touring career," Gee says. "He understands that it's a grind—it's a marathon, not a sprint."

Drake will also attempt to build a live fan base overseas in a way few rappers do. "We're going to work the international angle from the beginning, because that's a mistake I think a lot of artists make—they wait until they're hot in the U.S. before they start looking at the rest of the world," Gee says.

Roberson has big ambitions for Drake, who has already bee exposed to thousands of concertgoers opening for Lil Wayn "He's been cultivating on the arena level already and we don even have an album out," he says.

Gee and Roberson have even bigger plans for hip-hop tour stadiums. "I can't speak on it right now," Roberson says, "bu we will absolutely be on the phone within a year or year-and-half talking about the model of hip-hop stadium tours." A si gle-artist stadium tour could be hard to sell, but the pair h also been taking meetings with other artist representative about organizing one-off events.

"If we don't do that, who will?" Roberson asks rhetoricall "We're not stopping, we're only starting." ••

LOCAL FLAVOR

IS U.S. HIP-HOP LOSING ITS PLACE ON THE WORLD STAGE?

Lil Wayne's looming legal issues will no doubt put a damper on his 2010 worldwide touring plans. But the good news is that the rapper has already laid the groundwork for a promising overseas live career in the coming years.

In late October, Lil Wayne was forced to give up his passport after pleading guilty to attempted weapon possession that could land him a year in prison. (Sentencing isn't expected until February.) But two weeks prior to the guilty plea, the rapper sold out three makeup concerts at the 5,000-capacity HMV Hammersmith Apollo in London, as well as shows at the 5,500-capacity Heineken Music Hall in Amsterdam and the 7,000-capacity Zenith in Paris, according to his representatives.

Those involved with the London shows say Lil Wayne could've moved up to a larger venue if the proper production had been in place. "If Wayne had been ready and had the production, we could've done [London's 12,500-seat] Wembley Arena," says AEG Live president of international touring Rob Hallett, whose company co-promoted the shows with SJM Concerts.

Sports & Entertainment Financial Group president Shawn Gee, who also serves as Lil Wayne's tour producer and tour business manager, says the ballroom and theater stint was meant to expose the rapper's live prowess to European audiences.

"Although a lot of them purchased his record, they didn't know Lil Wayne the live performance artist," he says. "From an international perspective, you truly have to go and develop those markets."

Prior to the guilty plea, Lil Wayne's team had planned for the artist to perform internationally in 2010, including dates in Europe, Japan, Australia and New Zealand. Gee declined to comment on how Lil Wayne's legal troubles could hinder those plans, but he notes that the rapper will likely perform in larger European venues on his next tour.

If all goes as planned, Lil Wayne could someday achieve arena-level headlining status in certain parts of the world, as seen in recent years with superstar artists Kanye West, Jay-Z, Eminem and 50 Cent. But while they are certainly capable of playing bigger venues in select international markets, concert promoters throughout Europe, Japan and Australia seem to agree that the demand for midlevel hip-hop is decreasing and generally concertgoers prefer home-grown rappers who deliver shows in their own language—or at least in their own accent.

For example, West may have nearly sold out Paris' 17,000-capacity Bercy venue in 2008, but "the demand for U.S. acts is not growing in France," says Angelo Gopee, production director for Nous Productions, which has booked shows for West and Jay-Z. But domestic rappers like NTM, Diam's, Iam, Rohff and Booba are consistent sellers at the box office.

Meanwhile, some German promoters aren't willing to pay the fees that top American hip-hop acts demand, according to Four Artists managing director Michael Sand. "There are so many strong national acts," he says, "that U.S. acts are not necessarily the be-all and end-all. They also have wrong ideas about what can be paid and the numbers of [fans] they can attract."

The core rap touring market in Japan is weakening, says Naoki Shimizu, president of Creativeman Productions, Japan's primary promoter for major international hip-hop acts. "There used to be many club tours by U.S. hip-hop artists around four or five years ago, but it's quite hard to find now," he says. "Tickets don't sell these days."

Some popular American rappers occasionally play dates in Australia, but recently canceled or postponed dates —sometimes at the last minute—by hip-hop artists like Pitbull, Busta Rhymes, Coolio and Timbaland have hurt the genre's reputation among fans.

"I've seen more cancellations of hip-hop tours than I have seen tours go through," says Frontier Touring tour coordinator Michael Harrison. As a result, he adds, "over the years, there has been a lot of mistrust of hip-hop acts amongst Australian audiences. That doesn't generally happen with local rappers, such as Hilltop Hoods and Bliss n Eso." —MP

WEEZY RAPS ABOUT ROCK, 'REBIRTH' AND LIFE ON THE ROAD

BY GAIL MITCHELL

Lil Wayne always keeps it moving. That's the one absolute you learn about the rapper after talking with him.

When Billboard caught up with Lil Wayne—real name Dwayne Michael Carter Jr.—it was a couple of days after he had finished a set of shows in London, Paris and Amsterdam—and a week before he pled guilty to attempted weapon possession for an incident that occurred in 2007. Having barnstormed his way through 68 stateside shows during his top-grossing I Am Music and America's Most Wanted tours in 2008 and 2009 (see story, page 21), he deserved a few days off. Instead, the Miami-based rapper was busy completing his free "No Ceilings" mixtape—"A big thank you to fans for coming out and showing me love every single night" of the tours.

Several leaks from the Halloween release feature Wayne rapping over beats from Jay-Z's "Run This Town" and Fabolous' "Throw It in the Bag." Slated for release just after the mixtape, on Nov. 23, is the "Mr. Carter" EP, exclusive to Best Buy.

It's all in anticipation of Wayne's "Rebirth." While his Universal Motown publicist didn't respond to several requests for comment, another source at the label says that Wayne's legal issues—the rapper faces a one-year sentence in February—will not impede the often-delayed album's Dec. 15 release. But one question looms: Can Lil Wayne keep it moving when it comes to maintaining his sales and touring success?

How has touring helped shape your success thus far?

It's played a big part in my career. I've been on the road since I was about 14. Since then there's never been one city that I've been stable in for six months. Honestly, touring is just another part of my day. The stage comes at 9 p.m. OK, I eat at 12 [laughs]. It's natural for me, not a preparation. And I thank God for that every day.

Whether it's a club or arena, I perform my ass off. I go out there and give it my all every single night. I would die onstage. Some people like to just go out there and have their song played with five people onstage, and you don't even know who four of them are. You've got to go out there and perform. Once that works, people will come. And as long as people keep screaming when I step out there, I'll keep giving them me.

Do you have a sense of withdrawal when you're not on the road?

As soon as you start to develop that sense of withdrawal, you get a call from your manager [in Wayne's case, Cortez Bryant] telling you that you've got 60 nights coming up somewhere so you'll be all right [laughs]. Honestly, the way my schedule is, my days—even when I'm not on tour—are still full. I'm in the studio every single night. There's really never a moment for me to actually sit and breathe and even notice if I'm having withdrawal symptoms because I have to keep it moving. I just turned 27 on Sept. 27, so I'm not in a rush to take any downtime.

Speaking of keeping it moving, "Rebirth" is finally coming. Given earlier leaks from the project, did you make many changes to the final version?

As of now "Rebirth" is coming out as a double-disc with a [disc of songs] by Young Money. I had to add new cuts because a lot of things leaked, making people think they had an idea of what I was doing with "Rebirth" and what it would sound like. And I hated that because I never want anybody to think they know what I'm doing until I present it. So what I did was make it totally different—I flipped it.

Does the album still lean toward rock?

Yes, the album is still rock. I play guitar on 80% of the songs and there's a lot of rock influences and rock beats. I also have Travis Barker on the album.

But I don't want people to think I'm trying to do something I can't do. Don't think you're going to put on the album and hear me screaming and singing . . . Don't worry about that [laughs]. When people hear me say rock, they may get a little scared like, "Oh, God. What is he going to do?"

When I said I was doing a rock album, it was about doing a freedom thing. This album isn't hip-hop. When I do my "Carter" albums, I know I've got to rap, I know I've got to spit—I know the words I've got to say and the subjects I've got to talk about. I also know the things I shouldn't say, the things I shouldn't talk about.

There's none of those limits on this album. I say what I want, how I want. That's what this album is: a freedom album. And rock is the avenue that gives you that freedom.

I'm just having fun, that's all. Trust me: People will like these songs. It's my job to make them love them, but I know for a fact they'll like them.

What can we expect from the second disc by Young Money?

The expectations for Young Money are great. But I think they'll meet them because everybody—Drake, Nicki Minaj, Lil Chuckee, Shanell, Lil Twist, Tyga, Jae Millz, Gudda Gudda, Mack Maine and T-Streets—works their asses off. Every song is great, which creates a dilemma because we don't know what to pick as singles.

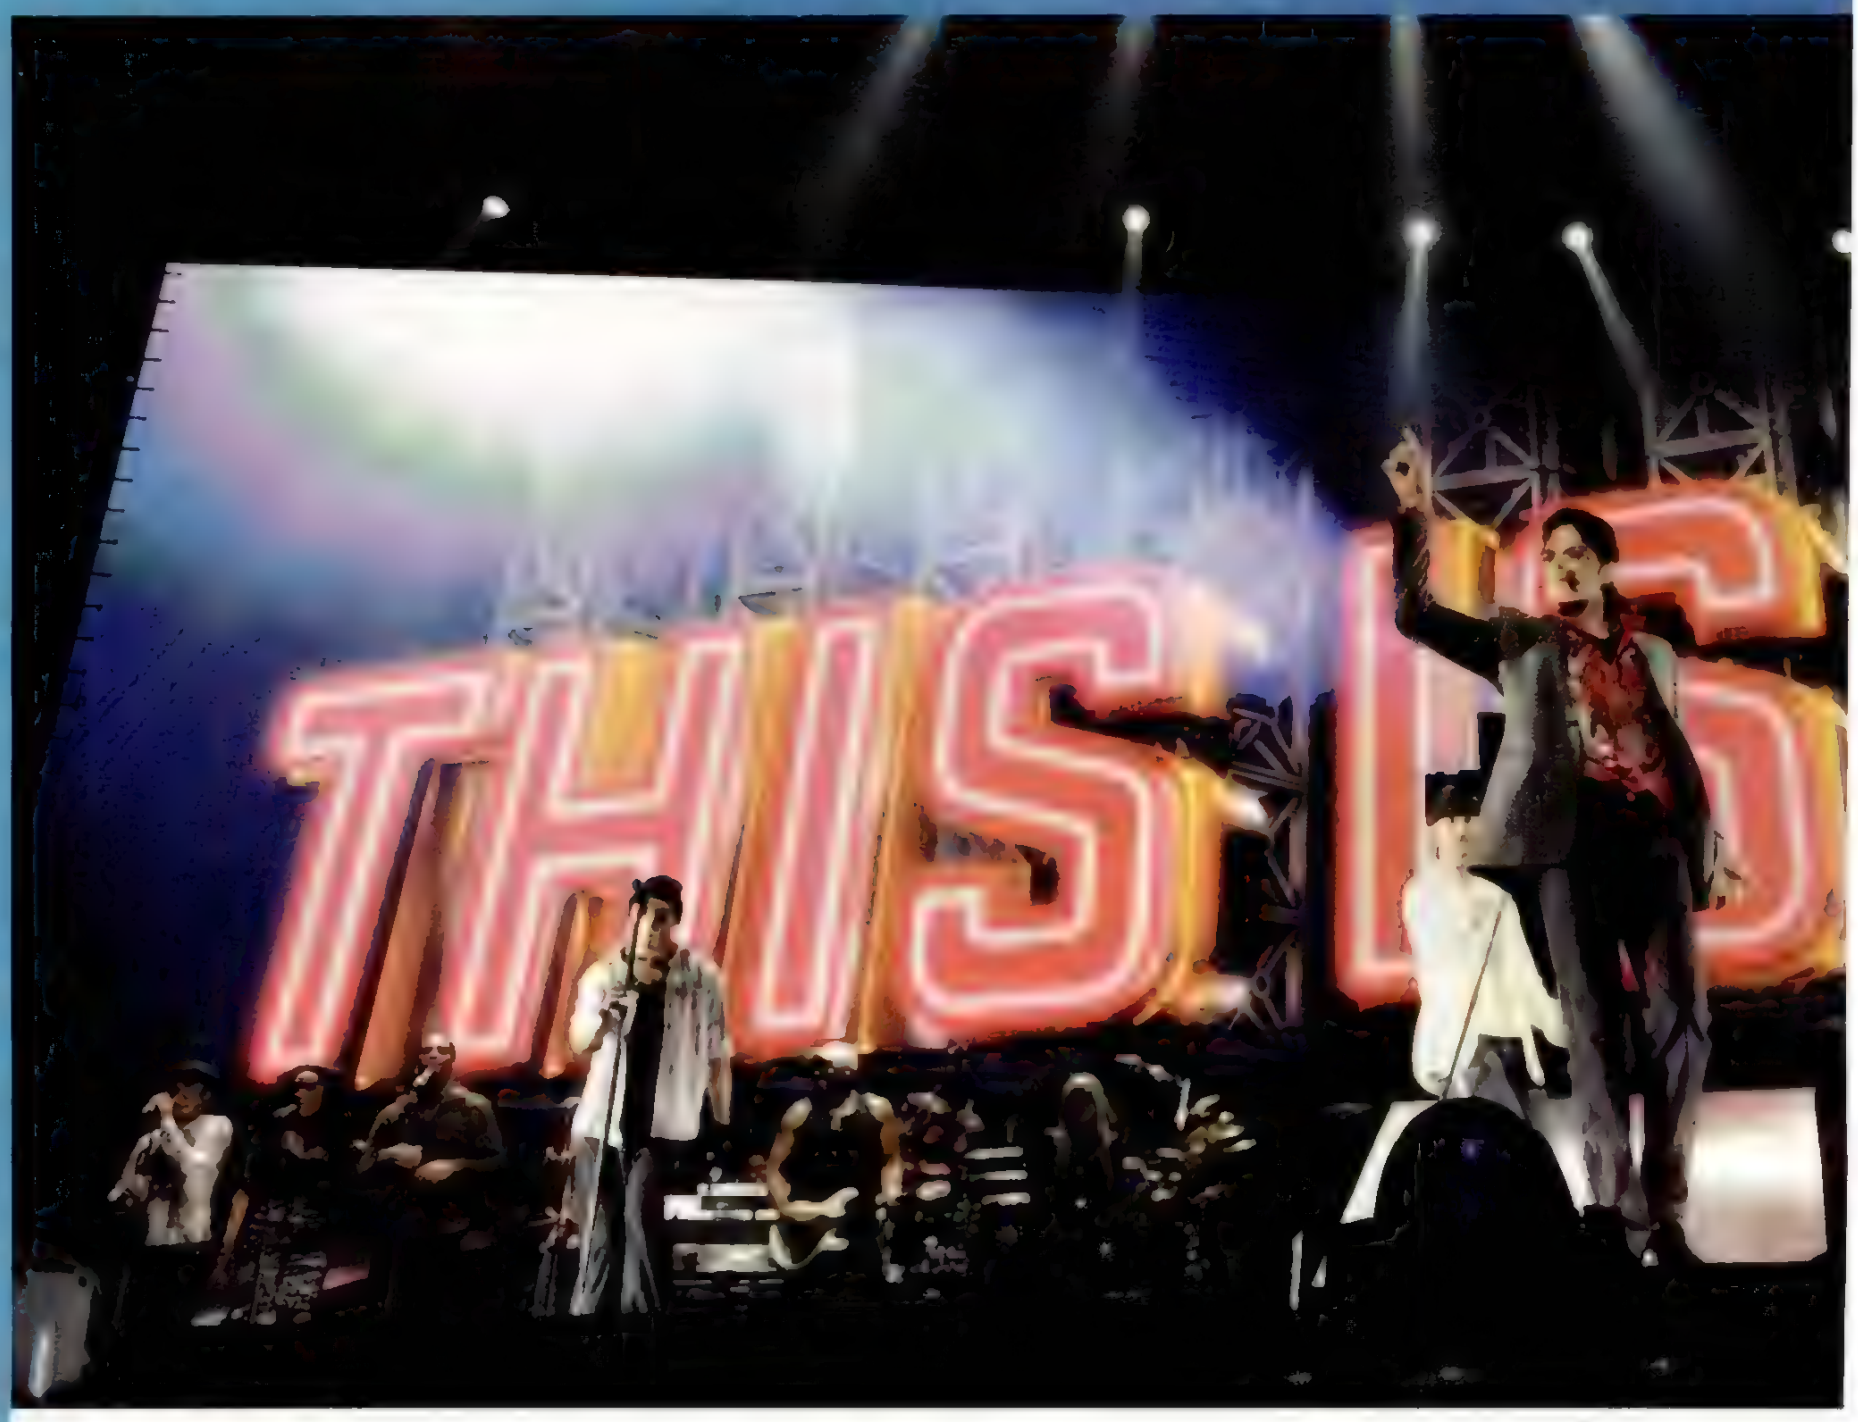
Any truth to rumors that "Tha Carter IV" is coming this year as well?

No, no. "Carter IV" is coming next year at a proper time like it's supposed to.

You recently did a guest feature on the new Weezer album. Any more rock projects on the horizon?

Weezer gave me a vivid picture of what they were trying to accomplish and it was wonderful to be a part of that. I also worked with Kid Rock and with Fall Out Boy—Pete Wentz and I are real tight. Other than that, I've worked with Gym Class Heroes. And I've been kicking it with Green Day, but I'm not sure if we'll get anything done real soon. You know me—I've been out there doing things with everybody.

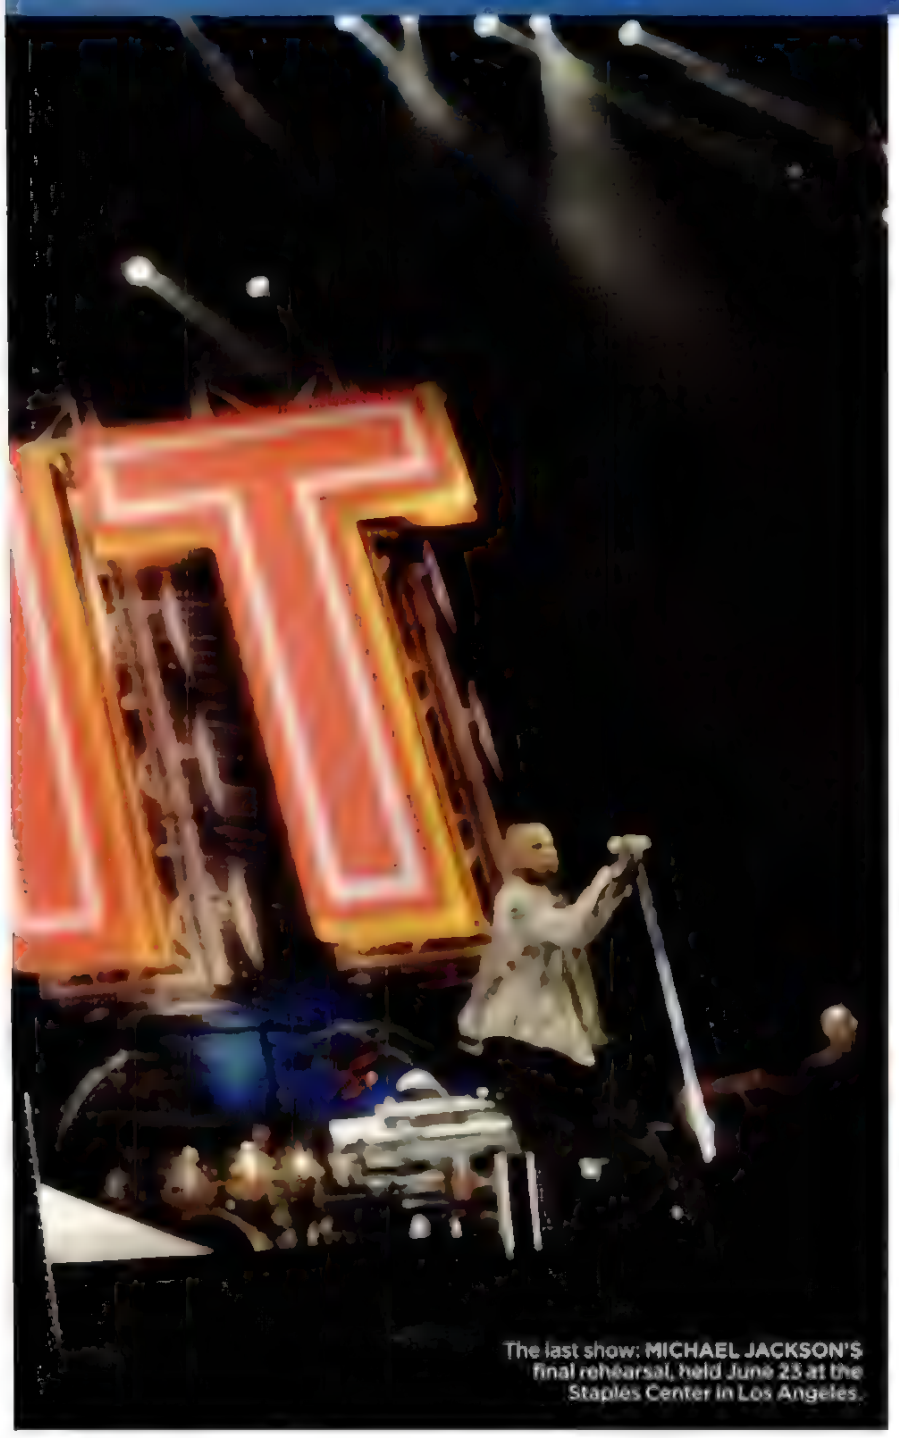
Including working with Chris Brown, Madonna and Shakira. Do you get concerned about overexposure?



I just don't understand the whole point about using yourself too much or doing too many features. This is work; this is a job that we're doing and you want to work as much as you can. I've been wanting to ask people, "You know, I get paid for those features, right? So do you think I'm getting paid too much or do you think I'm working too much? Is that what you're asking me?" I don't get it. All I'm doing is putting in overtime [laughs].

How is Drake's solo album coming along?

He's one of those guys who needs no help [laughs]. I don't do anything but say, "Let me hear that song." And I'm blown away with every word. I'm honored to have him. Knowing Drake, I want to say he's probably finished with the project. But he's one of those guys who keeps going back to put more icing on the cake.



Is a Hot Boyz reunion still in the works?

I still agree with it—let's put it like that. There are four sides to this, and it's hard getting four sides to come to the table. But I still agree. ••••

That Was That And 'This Is It'

The Inside Story Of How The Biggest Disaster In The History Of The Concert Business Turned Into The Most Anticipated Music Film Of The Year BY RAY WADDELL

The last show: MICHAEL JACKSON'S final rehearsal, held June 23 at the Staples Center in Los Angeles.

'or "This Is It," Michael Jackson's planned 50-oncert residency at London's O2 Arena, the star's udden, tragic death really could have been it, with nillions of dollars lost for producer/promoter AEG Live and the star's vision never realized. ■ nstead, the movie and music divisions of Sony ave a film and soundtrack to sell, and AEG will hare in the proceeds. But neither would have appened if the companies hadn't had fire-drill-aced meetings to turn a human tragedy into what s already being described as a creative and inancial triumph. ■ On Oct. 26, Sony's Epic label eleased the double-disc set "This Is It" to coincide ith the release of the movie of the same name, hich arrived in theaters Oct. 28 and will run for a mited two-week engagement. It opened Vednesday with a one-day gross of $7.4 million in ne United States and $20.1 million worldwide.

"The film answers a lot of questions," says Rob Stringer, chairman of Sony Music. "I can't comment on a lot of issues that were going on with Michael, nor can anyone else, it's very difficult. But you want to know that he was still a fantastic entertainer, that he still cared, that he was still musically amazing, and all those things are just obvious in this film."

The saga began with the announcement last March of Jackson's string of shows at the O2, the result of two years of talks between Jackson and AEG Live, spearheaded by AEG Live CEO Randy Phillips. The ideas discussed included a tour, a few shows and, finally, a residency. "It took a while for [Jackson] to get comfortable with this, but when he finally made the decision that he wanted to do something, we were in the unique position where London was obviously the perfect place to do it," says AEG CEO Tim Leiweke.

Ticket sales for the initial 10 shows blew up at the box office, and the number of dates was raised to 50. Although all parties were taken aback by the demand, Leiweke says Jackson was fully committed to 50 shows, despite reports to the contrary. "We've heard all of the speculation and opinions out there, but the reality is this is something Michael wanted to do," he says.

Conceptually, Leiweke says the production was "all Michael's" vision—and that vision was expensive. "It was budgeted to be $12 million, but Michael had big dreams and big vision," Leiweke says. "By the time we were ready to go to London we were at $35 million."

In March Jackson reached out to Frank DiLeo, who managed him during a spectacular '80s run that included the star's most successful albums and tours. "Even though he fired me, Michael was still my friend. We never lost the friendship," says DiLeo, who had "no hesitation" about coming back to work for Jackson. "I was extremely excited about being back with him, because we were a magical team in the '80s. He missed it, I missed it."

As rehearsals got under way, public skepticism turned into anticipation. Even the rehearsals two nights before Jackson's death "were extraordinary," Leiweke says. "Everyone came out of there talking about how incredible it was."

The June 24 rehearsal didn't run as long, Leiweke says, and Jackson spent much of that time reviewing video production elements. "He wasn't taxing his voice that night because he was getting ready for London," Leiweke says.

At 12:30 p.m. June 25, Leiweke received a call informing him Jackson had been taken to the hospital. "Like the rest of the world, we were on the outside," he says. "Randy [Phillips] didn't know specifics until he got to the hospital, and by then, unfortunately, it was our worst scenario. It was shocking because what we knew was he was healthy—of that we were certain."

As word of Jackson's death spread, AEG had no time to mourn. The company shifted from preproduction to damage control. "A lot of decisions were made between Tim Leiweke and myself on cell phone while I was standing outside the emergency room," Phillips says. "The first thing we did was have our security close off Staples Center, shut down the production and put all of our intellectual property into the vault at Staples Center so nobody could get near it or leave with it."

As Jackson's death became a media circus, Leiweke ordered Staples Center GM Lee Zeidman to turn the arena into a fortress. "We locked the building down and said, 'No one goes in and no one goes out,' " Leiweke says. The instructions were clear: No pictures of the set, no one in Jackson's dressing room, no one touches anything. "We fired a couple of employees because they took pictures of the stage and we thought that was inappropriate."

Jackson died on a Thursday, which meant AEG executives in London and the company's Los Angeles headquarters had a marathon meeting. Amid their grief, AEG executives started trying to figure out what to do about their investment, even as the words "financial disaster" started to creep into news reports.

"We weren't thinking that way," Leiweke says. "We knew we were in a bad spot and dealing with a crisis, but we believed eventually we'd work our way out of this. Needless to say, those were really difficult, long days—bad days—but I don't think we ever panicked. We had faith that we would eventually find a way to come out of this and recoup the investment."

The decision that saved "This Is It"—as both AEG's investment and Jackson's legacy—had been made weeks before. Rehearsals had been filmed, and it is that edited footage that became the Sony Pictures film.

"I said, 'We've got to archive your comeback because this is going to be historical,' and [Jackson] agreed," Phillips says. "We never expected it to be a movie. This was really for his personal archives—and also to be B-roll and behind-the-scenes footage that probably would have been a DVD concert film."

Within days of Jackson's death, AEG started editing the rehearsal footage into a narrative at AEG's L.A. Live facilities. "Under armed guards we had the editors working for three weeks collating 130 hours [of footage] and distilling it down to three-and-a-half hours in the first pass," Phillips says. "And then we took 12 minutes of that and used it as a demo."

Up until longtime Jackson associates John Branca and John McLain, who had been named executors in Jackson's will, were officially named administrators July 6, AEG had been able to act unilaterally. There was some doubt about who would control Jackson's estate, and "we didn't event know there was a will for over a week," Phillips says. As those details were resolved, however, AEG began negotiating with the executors—Branca and McLain, and attorneys Joel Katz and Howard Weitzman—to determine how to proceed.

Fortunately, AEG's corporate cousins include Anschutz Film Group and its Walden Media division ("Ray," "The Chronicles of Narnia"). So AEG Live had Anschutz Film Group negotiate with potential distribution partners.

'A LOT OF DECISIONS WERE MADE BETWEEN TIM LEIWEKE AND MYSELF ON CELL PHONE WHILE I WAS STANDING OUTSIDE THE EMERGENCY ROOM.' —RANDY PHILLIPS, AEG LIVE

Four studios bid on "This Is It": Universal, Fox, Paramount and Sony, which submitted the winning bid of $65 million, including $5 million for AEG's editing costs, according to Phillips.

The driving force behind the film negotiations with Sony was Jackson's estate—represented by Branca and McLain—which had to grant permission; Branca's firm, Ziffren Brittenham, negotiated the deal, in consultation with Phillips. Sony Music controls Jackson's catalog, but AEG executives were also impressed by Sony Pictures co-chairman Amy Pascal, who was relentless in her pursuit of "This Is It." "She had a great vision," Phillips says. "She pursued it hard and she called everybody, all the time. She had to have this movie."

One particular meeting stands out for Phillips. "The first marketing meeting I had at Sony Pictures, there were about 40 people in this conference room, and what blew my mind was the fact that this little movie, this HD footage of Michael Jackson, was getting the attention of a whole studio. They just absolutely stopped to focus on this project," he says. "And I was thinking to myself just how much Michael would have loved this, because it was so over the top."

On Aug. 10, Los Angeles Superior Court approved a deal that Jackson's estate would get 90% of the film's net revenue, with the remainder going to AEG. (AEG will also receive revenue from the soundtrack.) That's a small percentage, considering that AEG put up the investment. "I'm sure some would argue that this is a small percentage to take for that much risk and that much work," Leiweke says, "but we didn't want there to be any doubt as to our priorities here, which is to try and protect the best interests of the estate."

The "This Is It" film was created by the same team that had been working on the concerts, including manager DiLeo, director Kenny Ortega, choreographer Travis Payne, music director Michael Bearden and Concerts West co-producer/co-CEO Paul Gongaware.

"The fact that [Kenny Ortega] is also a movie director is a good thing in terms of understanding what footage they had," Stringer says. "I'm not sure we'd have gotten this done if it would have been someone else coming in to work on it."

The film represents "unrestricted access to an unguarded genius," Phillips says. "There's nothing in it other than the credits that wasn't shot or recorded from March 5, when we did the press conference in London, to June 25, when he died. It's completely authentic. Nothing has been doctored."

DiLeo refutes a small but vocal group of fans who see the film as exploitative of Jackson, who they believe was in poor health at the end of his life. "It shows what kind of shape he was in, and he was in very good shape," he says. "The reports of him dying and being 108 pounds are false. The autopsy came back and he was 136 pounds, and I can't remember him being over 150 in all the years I worked with him. The film shows he had a clear head, that he was involved."

Stringer says that "if I had watched a shock [or] tattle documentary, I don't think we would have wanted to be associated. It's really a behind-the-scenes look at Michael's rehearsal for a huge comeback. He is wonderful in it."

At press time "This Is It" was set for viewing on 18,000 screens worldwide, and it's anticipated to become the top-grossing concert film of all time. It should handily beat "Hannah Montana/Miley Cyrus: Best of Both Worlds Concert Tour," which earned $70.6 million worldwide, according to Box Office Mojo, on just 700 screens.

For now, at least, the film's run has been limited to two week This qualifies "This Is It" for Academy Award consideratio and should generate buzz for the upcoming DVD, which is e pected to arrive in first-quarter 2010.

The "This Is It" soundtrack was conceived alongside the fil project "when we saw the early footage, pretty much a few da after he died," Stringer says.

Sony Music dealt with the estate, primarily Branca an McLain, to develop the project under pressure—"It would b strange not to have an accompanying piece to the movie Stringer says—but quality wasn't sacrificed. "The packaging expensive and really nice," he says, noting that the booklet coul probably be sold on its own. "We got it right."

There isn't any exclusivity for "This Is It" at retail. "We' brokered deals with every single retailer in some way or th other, on a global basis," Stringer says, which resulted in complicated manufacturing schedule. The proces of distributing the physical product remind Stringer of earlier days. "I've done this long time and I've worked on lots c Michael Jackson records, so in a wa it's how Michael's records used to b distributed," he says. "They were a ways delivered on short notice an there was always mass deman around the world."

On the digital front, after muc speculation about bundling "Th Is It," it will be sold on iTune mostly, but not completely, a la cart All the songs will be available as ind vidual tracks except the single.

Limiting the a la carte option is a sma business decision. Jackson's recorded wo has flown off the shelves since his death, with h catalog of solo albums having sold 5.5 million copies the United States since that time, according to Nielsen Soun Scan. He has sold 9.2 million U.S. downloads since his deat compared with 1.3 million the year before that, and he will a most certainly be the best-selling artist of 2009.

Expectations run high for "This Is It," though Stringer d clined to offer a sales projection. "I'm pretty sure there will b a value-pack price; the package is a lavish booklet and a real nice cardboard packaging, so it's a proper booklet, not just jewel-case CD," he says. "I think the retail pricing will be ve interesting, because I imagine people will be very competitive

As AEG worked to put together the movie and its soundtrac it took shots from Jackson family members and others that th company is more interested in profits than in promoting Jac son's legacy. For his part, Phillips shrugs it off. "The proble with Michael is his death is as messy as his life was," he say "Everyone's looking for a villain. Sometimes there isn't a v lain—there's just bad circumstances and bad luck, and that what this was. I personally got attacked a few times on nation television, but my skin is thick and that's part of my job."

Stringer also feels strongly that Sony Music has taken th high road, saying the company's actions have been "a solutely the opposite of exploitation. I've worked with [Jac son] for a long time—a lot of this people in this compa have. We didn't take adverts when he died. The catalog w made available but we didn't do anything that we thoug was remotely crass or overcommercial. We've been caref because we've been protective of that legacy and we've do things the right way."

What Leiweke says he is most proud of is "under huge stres huge media scrutiny, and a few people saying things about that we were stunned people would think, we maintained t path. We did it with dignity. And when it's all said and done believe more than the financial gains, people will look at th way we handled ourselves, and more importantly look at th way we gave back to the estate in doing the best we could f our partnership. Our reputation was at stake, and I believe fro our darkest hour came our best moment."

What's Next For AEG

The Promoter Faced High Ticket Returns For Jackson's Shows. But Other Revenue Is Now Available

As AEG has tried to recoup its investment on Michael Jackson's "This Is It," it has faced one disappointment: Fewer fans than expected kept their tickets to the O2 shows as souvenirs.

When the promoter announced that fans who wanted to keep their concert tickets would have to forgo a refund, its executives hoped that as many as 40% would opt to do so. Instead, they overwhelmingly opted for refunds; only 14% decided to keep their tickets.

The retention rate would have been higher, AEG Live CEO Randy Phillips believes, if fans had one of the eight versions of the commemorative tickets in hand, complete with a hologram, as opposed to vouchers. Even so, the 14% who kept their vouchers added up to $5 million that AEG could keep instead of refunding, "which I would take as opposed to not having," Phillips says.

That's only one of several revenue streams AEG will not get from "This Is It." The company's global merchandising deal with Bravado, part of AEG's original deal with Jackson, included rights to broadcasts and secondary ticket sales, and Phillips says Bravado has already recouped on its merchandise royalty advance.

AEG also opened an exhibition of Jackson memorabilia at the O2 Oct. 27, the day the movie premiered in London; the exhibition will travel to New York and Los Angeles. "What we've done is take our exhibitions division and our folks from the Grammy Museum and asked them to design it and build it [by the London premiere]—which, by the way, is almost an impossible timeline," Leiweke says. "But we're used to impossible deadlines."

There's still talk of a Jackson tribute concert, although an event scheduled for late summer was canceled as the "This Is It" promotional cycle began. "I sat down with Michael's brothers, and the original plan was to take Aug. 29, Michael's 51st birthday, and do the actual show, the entire production, at the O2 in London using Usher and Justin [Timberlake] and Janet [Jackson] and the brothers," Phillips says. "We were actually going to do that one show, only on pay-per-view. But when we made the deal with Sony Pictures, one of the [provisions] was no one would see any of the production elements of 'This Is It' until the movie opened." A different tribute show may take place next year, Phillips says.

"You deal with the circumstances that God gives you and this was out of our control and a disaster," Leiweke says. "But we didn't have time to sit around and mourn—we had to react. We had obligations—and more than anything we felt we had a commitment back to Michael to make sure we took care of the kids. That meant we had to find a way to land on our two feet." —RW

Guitar Heroine

Orianthi Steps Out Of Michael Jackson's Shadow BY LARS BRANDLE

Orianthi Panagaris thought she had the perfect plan. The 24-year-old guitar virtuoso, who hails from Adelaide, Australia, was all set to shred as part of Michael Jackson's band during his set of comeback shows in London. She was also working on a solo debut, but thought it would be released after the run of shows that would establish her as the female Carlos Santana.

Then reality tragically intruded. Her plans came crashing down when Jackson died June 25 after suffering from a cardiac arrest, just three months before his planned return to the stage.

But rather than retreating, Orianthi, who uses only her first name professionally, changed course. Her debut album, "Believe"—for which she wrote songs and sings and plays guitar—was originally due later in the fall, but Geffen Records moved up the release date to Oct. 26 to take advantage of the hype surrounding the theatrical release of "This Is It," the posthumous Jackson music film. "When people see the movie, they're going to think I'm either the fastest ambulance chaser in the business or that I know what I'm doing," quips Ron Fair, chairman of Geffen Records. "She's absolutely the world's greatest female guitar shredder of all time. No disrespect to Lita Ford, but there's no comparison."

The global release of "This Is It" to an estimated 25,000 theaters worldwide by Oct. 28 presented a promotional opportunity too irresistible for Geffen to ignore. "Believe" was released Oct. 26, the same day as the soundtrack to "This Is It."

For the last three months of Jackson's life, Orianthi worked closely and intensely with the superstar. His death is still a raw topic for Orianthi, but she now feels comfortable opening up. "It was so devastating for all of us involved, working with him for three months preparing for the biggest show on Earth," she says. "But I got to play music with him—I'm so grateful I got that time. The experience made me believe in myself more."

Orianthi's stint with Jackson wasn't her first time working with a superstar collaborator. Her father, a performer in a Greek band, kept various guitars around the home, and it didn't take long before Orianthi picked her instrument. Throughout her teens, she traded riffs with the best in the business. By the age of 15 she had worked with her "hero" Steve Vai, and at 18 she had joined Santana onstage in her hometown. Tours and guest appearances followed with the likes of ZZ Top and Prince.

"It's not easy being a female guitar player," she says. "You have to believe in yourself. I had a teacher at school who told me to take up the harp. Hopefully we'll be able to inspire a whole bunch of kids to pick up a guitar and take it seriously. That's my goal: to inspire more female guitarists out there."

Word of the prodigious—and eye-catching—guitarist found its way to Fair, who went on to sign her to a worldwide deal. In 2006, at the age of 21, Orianthi relocated to Los Angeles, where she worked on her album with producer Howard Benson (the All-American Rejects, Daughtry, My Chemical Romance, Three Days Grace).

Orianthi soon grabbed the attention of manager Stirling McIlwaine, who had guided the careers of Daughtry and Jordin Sparks in the United States for Simon Fuller's 19 Entertainment. McIlwaine says he was "blow away" by his first glimpse of Orianthi. In early 2008, he and Fuller made her the first signing to 19 outside the "American Idol" franchise. "Our plan was always to position her as a guitar player. A female Slash, if you will," McIlwaine says. "In America, there are so many female pop singers who drop a guitar around their neck and strum a few chords to look cooler or better than they actually are. Ori is a totally different thing. She's the real deal, and she happens to sing. We decided early on to look at tasty moments where we could position her as a guitar player and use our clout as a management company to create opportunities for her."

The breakthrough presented itself in February, through a fortuitous onstage collaboration with Carrie Underwood at the Grammy Awards. In the days after the performance, Orianthi received a message through her MySpace page from Jackson's musical director Michael Bearden, inviting her to audition for the lead guitarist spot for the "This Is It" concerts.

"I've never been so nervous in my life, auditioning for Michael," she recalls. After Orianthi tore her way through a rendition of "Beat It"—whose guitar solo was originally performed by Eddie Van Halen—Jackson gave the nod and she spent the next three months rehearsing with the icon, six hours each day.

But for all Orianthi's guitar credentials, "Believe" is essentially a conventional pop album with an utterly unconventional guitar solo on each track. Jackson fans no doubt will tune in to the album closer, "God Only Knows," a late entry to the album that deals with loss.

Fair also wants to build a merch business around Orianthi and says he hasn't ruled out the likelihood of a "Guitar Hero" game in her image. "From a merch standpoint, there's so much you could do with a female guitar hero which has never been done before," he says. "I'm sure we can start extrapolating with pink Strats or nail polish with USB drives shaped in the shape of guitars."

The first single, "According to You," has been serviced to U.S. top 40 radio. A hectic U.S. promotional schedule in recent weeks has led to Orianthi appearing on "Good Morning America," "So You Think You Can Dance" and "On-Air With Ryan Seacrest" and in a feature in "USA Today." She will appear as a guest on Adam Lambert's solo album, while her own album will be released Down Under Nov. 6 through Universal Music Australia. In 2010, she plans to mount a worldwide tour.

"In a world full of gatekeepers and haters, you can't hate Ori because she's a legitimate and incredible talent, and nothing like that has come along ever," Fair says. "When everyone sees this movie, they're going to say, 'Holy cow, she's a genius.' " ••••

Welcome To Paradise

Alejandro Sanz Steps Up His Marketing Game On 'Paraíso Express'

BY LEILA COBO • PHOTOGRAPH BY RUBEN MARTIN

Alejandro Sanz knows his fans have different definitions of paradise.¶ For some, it's a walk in the rain; others, one child's love of running; and others, a group of friends frolicking at the beach. Sanz's fans captured these moments, and hundreds more, in home videos they've uploaded to Sanz's YouTube channel. In the videos, which range from 10 seconds to a minute in length, they illustrate what paradise means to them in an allusion to Sanz's new album—"Paraíso Express"—and the single "Looking for Paradise," featuring Alicia Keys.

The campaign is as whimsical as it is brilliant, and it's part of a broad marketing effort that seeks to bring the usually reticent Sanz closer to his fan base as he prepares to release "Paraíso" Nov. 10 on Warner Music Latina.

Sanz's total world album sales surpass 25 million, according to Warner. In the United States, he's collectively sold 1.5 million albums, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

But three years after his latest studio set, Sanz returns to find a challenging marketplace, one where traditional promotion no longer applies. In response, Sanz and his label are consciously trying to get closer to his broad and widespread fan base in ways they hadn't done before.

They include the "Looking for Paradise" promotion, a one-hour special and TV spot campaign with DirecTV, a Verizon TV campaign and the launch of an interactive Web page, administered by Warner, where Sanz and fans comment and blog almost nonstop.

A key factor in the effort was the Web site, whose entire setup invites direct communication between Sanz—who is constantly tweeting and uploading content—and his fans, who are invited to do the same and then comment. The result is a page that is almost live and whose content changes literally by the hour, with Sanz chronicling every single step of his promotion. While the notion of big acts actively blogging is commonplace in the mainstream market, few Latin names do the same (although tweeting is becoming far more commonplace). Blogs vary from videos and photos to press releases to content that is uniquely Sanz; prior to a visit to Mexico, for example, he posted a poem dedicated to the country, clearly penned by him.

"We're working very hard on my Web page and it's exciting because people are responding," Sanz says. "They're delighted with this new way of promoting the music. Because when the industry no longer has the power to fill up the streets with posters or TV with ads, there is a need for imagination and creativity. And for me, this promotion is far more effective and thrilling."

The most unique piece of Sanz's online promotions may be the "Looking for Paradise" campaign, which stemmed from the single's title.

He liked it so much, in fact, that he asked several of his artist friends—including Shakira, Laura Pausini and Paulina Rubio—to tape 10-second video segments of what paradise meant for them. The videos were posted on Sanz's YouTube channel and garnered enough traffic that he then asked fans to upload their own clips. Of the approximately 800 submissions, 30 were chosen for inclusion in one long video that runs the length of the song and is also posted on Sanz's Web page and YouTube channel.

But the notion of bringing Sanz closer to his fans transcends the home video campaign.

DirecTV also chose Sanz to be the first Latin musician featured in an extensive promotional campaign that includes TV spots and a one-hour special.

"He fits perfectly with our brand," DirecTV PR senior manager Naomi Rodriguez says, noting that Sanz is the first Latin musician with a promotional campaign on DirecTV (although the channel has featured other Latin celebrities) and the first Latin name to get a one-hour special on DirecTV's proprietary, noncommercial 101 channel, which has featured artists like Beyoncé and Katy Perry in the past and reaches 18 million DirecTV subscribers.

> —ALEJANDRO SANZ

In the spots, Sanz is sitting in his living room, talking about his music and tastes as "Looking for Paradise" plays in the background. While viewers are urged to subscribe to DirecTV to get the same soccer channels Sanz likes to watch, they're also urged to purchase "Paraíso Express." The spots began airing this week on all Spanish-language TV stations and will be shown throughout the year.

The second component, the TV special "Más Allá del Paraíso: Un Encuentro con la Musica y la Pasión de Alejandro Sanz," will air Nov. 23 on 101 and feature interviews with Sanz and performances that haven't appeared before on TV.

The campaign was negotiated purely for its promotional value, with no sponsorship fees involved. A similar agreement was reached with Verizon, which launched a TV campaign timed with the Latin Grammy Awards.

The spots, which began airing Oct. 16 on Univision-owned stations, will run through the first week of November and feature a Sanz fan who wants access to the artist.

"He's doing promotion he hadn't done in a long time," says Gabriella Martinez, VP of marketing for Warner Music Latin America. "For example, he's in Mexico now visiting radio stations, something I don't think he's done in the last two albums."

Warner has also negotiated several radio promotions, including a private Univision Radio show for fans only in Las Vegas later this year.

Sanz will reach out to the masses with a Nov. 5 performance at the Latin Grammys, then perform eight shows at Madrid's Compac Gran Vía Theater, which seats 8,000. The shows—which will take place between the last week of November and the first week of December—were promoted under the tag line "Sit down and feel next to him" and sold out in less than an hour. (By comparison, Sanz's last U.S. tour took him to 28 cities, grossed $8.7 million and had an attendance of 161,000, according to Billboard Boxscore.)

Sanz, a soulful vocalist with a distinctive raspy voice and complex compositions, is regarded worldwide as one of Latin music's top singer/songwriters. His songs, which blend pop with traditional Spanish rhythms, funk and jazz, were first showcased on his 1997 breakthrough album "Más," which yielded the hit "Corazón Partío" and has sold 3.2 million copies worldwide, according to Warner.

"Paraíso Express" is a departure from the more moodier and ruminative "El Tren de los Momentos" (2006) and showcases Sanz's airier, more melodic side. And, maybe more than any other Spanish artist (save perhaps the recent exception of David Bisbal), Sanz, who lives in Miami, has been able to effectively erase the boundaries between Spain and Latin America. He's seen by fans as a continental artist who belongs to everyone.

This is charmingly evident in the "Looking for Paradise" promotion, since the videos hail from every possible place imaginable, from Argentina to Germany. The impetus for the promotion came from the track itself, a song Sanz co-wrote and performed with Alicia Keys, whom he'd met several years before at Rock in Rio in Lisbon, Portugal. The two ran into each other again in New York this year and Sanz asked her to sing on his album. Keys agreed based on the music and isn't using the track for her album.

The song, which this week is No. 3 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart, is an uptempo, almost bubbly track that features the singers trading verses in English and Spanish and singing about what they're looking for in paradise.

It's the first stab at English for Sanz, although there was talk of him doing so years ago. In this instance, all involved say, the decision wasn't motivated by crossover appeal but was merely an artistic one that came about through Sanz's meeting with Keys. The track isn't being promoted to English-language radio. But this does mark the first time that Sanz's first radio single is a duet.

In the meantime, Sanz's longtime manager Rosa Lagarrigue is concentrating on putting together Sanz's 2010 world tour and negotiating sponsorships; Sanz's last tour, in 2007, had 76 stops worldwide. Conversations are also ongoing to release "Paraíso Express" in non-Spanish-speaking territories, including European countries where Sanz's albums haven't been released before. For the time being, "Paraíso" will be released simultaneously in Spain, Latin America, Brazil and Portugal.

"Everyone is so motivated. I honestly haven't given it much thought," he says. "I think people will like it, and we'll see what happens with sales. Today, sales are not a reflection of success. I only think I have a great record that can reach many people. And fortunately, ours is an industry that markets emotions, and this is an album that excites people." ••••

The Billboard Touring Conference & Awards Celebrate The Best Of The Live Business

Concert contenders: Billboard Touring Award finalists include (counterclockwise from top) U2, TAYLOR SWIFT, MADONNA, KENNY CHESNEY and LIL WAYNE.

ROAD WARRIORS

Ticket Tallies Determine Winners Of Top Billboard Touring Awards; Industry And Fan Votes Also Measured

BY RAY WADDELL

Hometown heroes: With multiple dates at Croke Park in Dublin (shown here) and at Stade de France in Paris, U2 claims two of three finalist slots in the top boxscore category.

Despite all the forecasts of doom and gloom floating around last January, the concert industry survived just fine in '09. ¶ In fact, many tours, venues, live entertainment companies and events actually thrived this year, as the finalists for the 2009 Billboard Touring Awards demonstrate. ¶ Unlike most other industry awards, the Billboard Touring Awards are primarily based on actual numbers, real business being done, real butts in seats and actual turnstiles spinning. ¶ The exceptions: The recipients of the Legend of Live and Humanitarian Awards each year are chosen by Billboard editors, and the honorees for the concert marketing and promotion award and the Eventful Fans' Choice Award are selected through online voting by members of the touring industry and by fans, respectively. ¶ The nature of the business and the prep time involved in tabulating finalists and winners sometimes doesn't neatly match up with tour schedules, which means that some tours have to be broken up between different years. Still, for a given year, the Billboard Touring Awards showcase which acts, venues and firms were doing the greatest level business in the preceding months. The awards are based on numbers reported to Billboard Boxscore from Oct. 1, 2008, through Sept. 30, 2009.

The big enchiladas are the top tour and top draw awards, which acknowledge the top grossing and ticket-selling tours, respectively. The same three acts occupy the upper echelons in both categories: a pop diva that has transcended her genre, four guys from Ireland who are rewriting the stadium tour paradigm and a hard-rocking Aussie band that returned after a lengthy absence from the road to a jubilant global reception.

Two of the three finalists in the top draw and top tour categories are produced by Live Nation and steered by Live Nation global music chairman Arthur Fogel. The second leg of Madonna's Sticky & Sweet tour solidified the artist's stature as having the highest-grossing solo tour of all time and one of the biggest tours ever. Madonna previously captured the top tour award for Re-Invention in 2004.

For its part, U2 notched Europe and about half of North America under its belt on its record-shattering 360° tour by the cutoff point. The innovative "in-the-round" staging of the tour is allowing U2 to shatter box-office records without pricing tickets in the stratosphere. U2 won top tour and top draw for Vertigo in 2005.

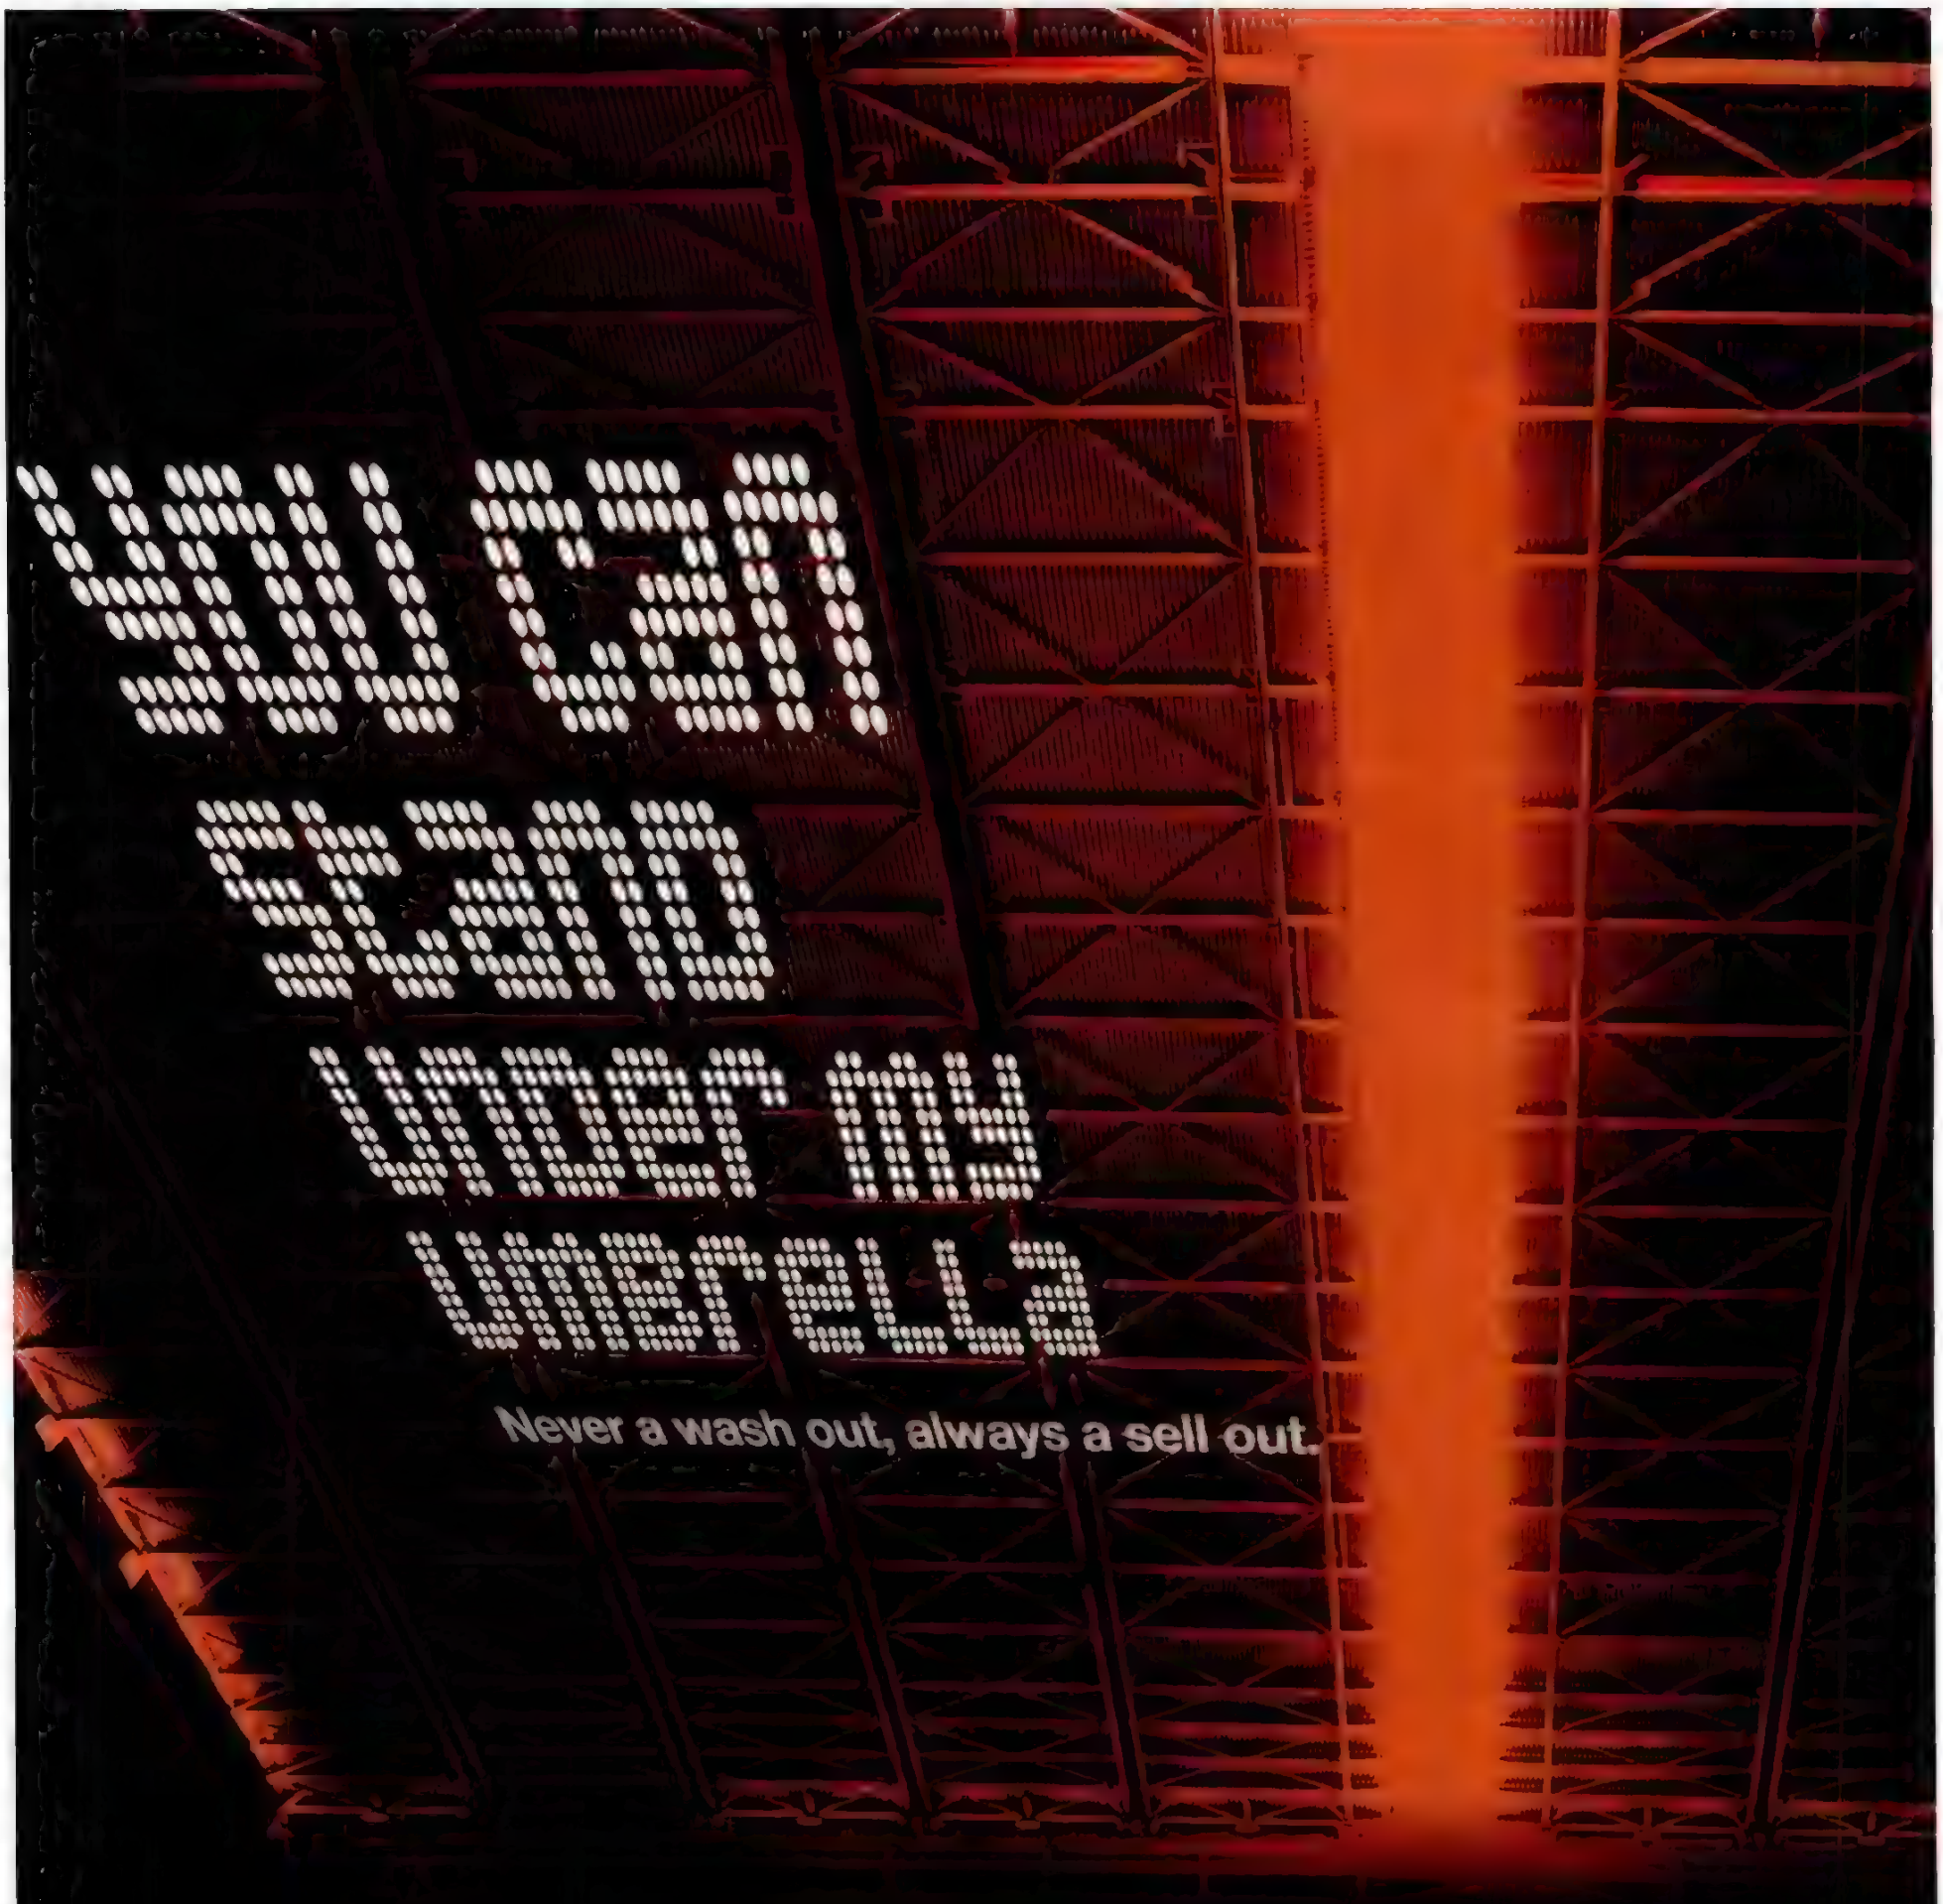
AC/DC joins Madonna and U2 as contenders in the top tour and top draw categories.

For Fogel, it has been another monster year in a career of monster years. His tours by the Police, Madonna and U2 have been previous winners at the Billboard Touring Awards.

"To have both the biggest band in the world in U2 and the biggest female artist in Madonna as finalists is really fantastic," Fogel says. "It is a true testament to their global appeal, ticket-selling power and brilliant talent. I am truly privileged to be involved with these great artists who are at the top of their game."

It's likely that Fogel and Live Nation will be in a simila position in the coming years, as both U2 and Madonn are in the early stages of 10-year multirights deals with Liv Nation. "The successful partnership with Live Nation [wit U2 and Madonna] demonstrates the true potential that e: ists in the live business," Fogel says.

PROPERLY PACKAGED



The top package award, which goes to the top-grossin tour with three or more artists on the bill, is designed t reward synergistic packaging and value offered to cor sumers. This year's diverse mix of finalists include tours headlined by a familiar country superstar, a teer pop sensation and a mainstream rock juggernaut.

Five-time top package winner Kenny Chesney is bac again among the finalists with the Sun City Carnival tou Promoted nationally again by TMG/AEG Liv Chesney played a mix of arenas, amphith aters and NFL stadiums and included Miranc Lambert, Lady Antebellum, Sugarland an Montgomery Gentry on the bill.

Chesney has pretty much taken owne ship of this award, and TMG/AEG Live pre ident Louis Messina says Chesney's focu on providing value dates back to the artist own days as a fan.

"Kenny knows that buying a ticket and goir to a show is expensive, so he always wants h fans to have a great time from the opener unt his set," Messina says. "He does not need spend the money [on support], but he does."

Jonas Brothers continue their upward trend as finalists th year in the top package category following their World Tou 2009 with Jordin Sparks. Honor continued on >>p3

Joining forces: JONAS BROTHERS' tour with Jordin Sparks, Honor Society and the Wonder Girls is up for the top package award.

Raising the bar: The 125 acts at the Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival in June made it a finalist for top festival—after four previous wins.

Bonus bill: CHAD KROEGER of Nickelback performing on the Dark Horse tour, which is a finalist for top package.

from >>p32 Society and Wonder Girls. Sparks and Honor Society are both managed by Jonas Brothers' co-managers Phillip McIntyre and Kevin Jonas.

"This year was about Jonas Brothers making the leap of playing in the round to deliver as many seats as possible, selling 97%-98% of every seat available, keeping the ticket price under $90 and going to work every day," Live Nation VP Brad Wavra says. "The packaging happened to be self-serving in one sense, with Honor Society and Jordin managed by the same management company and on the same label. But the guys also took a leap of faith on a little band from South Korea called Wonder Girls. They believed in them and wanted to cultivate another touring act."

And Nickelback, the 2006 winner of the breakthrough award, is also a finalist for top package for its Dark Horse tour, with Hinder, Papa Roach and Saving Abel onboard for most of the run. The Dark Horse outing is also a finalist for the concert marketing and promotion award for the band's tour partnership with Nikon and Internet Explorer 8.

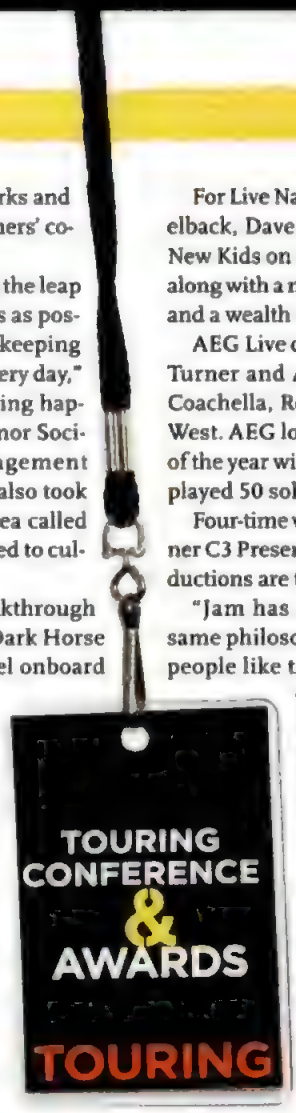
TOP BOXSCORE

The top boxscore award recognizes the top-grossing single engagement for the time period, the biggest of the big gigs. Two of these came from U2: July 24-27 at Croke Park in Dublin (U2's dates at Croke Park won this award in 2005) and July 11-12 at Stade de France in Paris.

The third finalist is also from Ireland, but is a festival: the sixth annual Oxegen Fest held July 10-12 at Punchestown Racecourse in Naas, Ireland. Produced by Dublin independent promoter Denis Desmond, director of MCD, Oxegen featured Kings of Leon, Snow Patrol, Blur and the Killers as headliners.

MCD owner Desmond says he is delighted that Oxegen has been named a finalist. "We pride ourselves on getting the best lineups. We have a great, appreciative audience, and being named a finalist is a huge credit to all the staff involved in the organization of the festival," he adds.

TOP FESTIVAL



In addition to being a top boxscore finalist, Oxegen is a finalist for the top festival award, along with a four-time winner—the Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival in Manchester, Tenn.—and a frequent finalist, the Coachella Valley Music & Arts Festival in Indio, Calif.

Coachella headliners included Paul McCartney, Leonard Cohen, the Killers and the Cure. "Coachella is in good company with the other festival finalists," says Paul Tollett, producer of Coachella for Goldenvoice/AEG Live, who says professionally produced and promoted festivals lift the entire festival business. "We feel the other promoting teams take their events as seriously as we do ours. This has elevated the festivals in this country and it's only going to get better."

At Bonnaroo, the lineup of 125 acts included Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band, Phish, Wilco, Elvis Costello, the Decemberists and Merle Haggard. "Each year we try to raise the bar in every facet of the festival," says Jonathan Mayers, president of Superfly Presents, co-producer of Bonnaroo with A.C. Entertainment. "You have to keep evolving. You don't want to stay static, or you go backward. Every year you want to look back and say, 'Wow, this was better than the last year.' "

TOP PROMOTERS

The global concert mega-promoters Live Nation and AEG Live are joined by São Paulo, Brazil, promoter Time 4 Fun as finalists for the top promoter award. T4F is also a finalist, with MCD and the Australian promoter Michael Coppel Presents, in the international independent promoter division.

LIVE NATION AND AEG ARE JOINED BY BRAZIL'S TIME 4 FUN AS FINALISTS FOR THE TOP PROMOTER OF THE YEAR AWARD

For Live Nation, tours by U2, Coldplay, Jonas Brothers, Nickelback, Dave Matthews Band, Fleetwood Mac, Rascal Flatts, New Kids on the Block and many others helped drive the year along with a massive promotion schedule at the amphitheater and a wealth of European festivals and tours.

AEG Live did very well with Chesney, Britney Spears, Tina Turner and American Idols Live, along with festivals like Coachella, Rothbury, Stagecoach, Mile High and All Points West. AEG lost what would have likely been the top boxscore of the year with the death of Michael Jackson, who would have played 50 sold-out shows at London's O2 Arena.

Four-time winner Jam Productions in Chicago, the 2007 winner C3 Presents in Austin and Madison, Wis.-based Frank Productions are the finalists for top independent promoter, U.S.

"Jam has continued to operate our business with the same philosophy we've always had: service, loyalty and treat people like they want to be treated," Jam co-founder Arny Granat says. "That does not mean we get any kudos or love back in today's world, but [co-founder] Jerry [Mickelson] and I choose to continue on this path."

Rock did the trick for Frank Brothers, who did well with tours in secondary markets from Buckcherry/Avenged Sevenfold, a Disturbed package and a Mudvayne/Black Label Society package, along with several Metallica dates. "We look at ourselves as being very fortunate," partner Fred Frank says. "There are not a whole lot of independent promoters left. They've either been bought out or squashed out. But we continue to fight for our niche and we feel like we're in a pretty good spot right now. And we're trying to stay a little under the radar."

TOP MANAGER, TOP AGENCY

The top manager award recognizes the management firm with the combined highest-grossing clients among the top 50 tours. This year's finalists are Maverick Management (Madonna), Principle Management (U2) and Front Line Management with a strong list of affiliated acts, including Chesney, the Eagles, Fleetwood Mac, New Kids on the Block, Neil Diamond, Kings of Leon and Luis Miguel.

Headed by Paul McGuinness, Principle Management won in 2005. Maverick, steered by Guy Oseary, won the top manager award in 2004 on the strength of Madonna's Re-Invention tour.

The top agency finalists have the highest-grossing combined tours among the top 50, with William Morris Endeavor Entertainment, Creative Artists Agency and Artists Group International being the top three this year.

CAA's tours that ranked in the top 50 include Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band, AC/DC, Jonas Brothers, Fleetwood Mac, Il Divo, New Kids on the Block, Kings of Leon, Eric Clapton and top comedy tour finalists Robin Williams and Dane Cook.

"From emerging artists to icons of the industry, 2009 has been an exceptional year for our clients and we are fortunate to play a role in their success," says Rob Light, managing partner/music head for CAA. "This is a testament to CAA's culture of collaboration—working closely with our colleagues across all areas of the agency and hand in hand with promoters, labels, managers, sponsors and venues."

William Morris Endeavor Entertainment saw success this year with acts like Spears, Trans-Siberian Orchestra, Rascal Flatts, Brad Paisley, the Eagles, Luis Miguel and the Killers.

The lone independent agency in the group, Artists Group International, has been a perennial finalist among the top agencies. "I am proud of my team and the tremendous work ethic that exists at AGI," president Dennis Arfa says. Among the tours fielded by AGI in 2009 were treks by Billy Joel & Elton John (with the Howard Rose Agency), Metallica, Mötley Crüe and Def Leppard. •••

Touring Experts Tackle Top Concerns On Conference Panels

BY RAY WADDELL

The issues facing the touring industry are growing increasingly complex, and the most pressing ones will be addressed Nov. 4-5 with provocative panels and intimate round tables at the sixth annual Billboard Touring Conference in New York. ¶ Taking on these topics will be a diverse lineup of industry players, ranging from innovative up-and-comers to savvy veterans, all of whom are playing a role in reshaping this critical part of the music business. ¶ Ticketing, marketing and promotion, new models, artist development, sponsorships, festivals, the evolution of management companies and the big-picture landscape will all be discussed on in-depth panels. Also, AEG Live CEO Randy Phillips will lead a behind-the-scenes look at the aftermath of the This Is It tour plans following Michael Jackson's death in June.

LOWDOWN FROM LIANA

Artist development remains one of the most critical issues in the music business, and a panel on this topic has opened every Billboard Touring Conference since year one. In what has become a remarkably prescient session, this group of managers, promoters and agents will delve into key career-building components. They'll offer insight on which acts should be on everyone's radar and how the next generation of arena headliners is being fostered.

MSG Entertainment VP of concert marketing Liana Farnham will again moderate the panel. Onboard are C3 Presents partner Charles Attal; William Morris Endeavor Entertainment (Rascal Flatts, Brad Paisley) agent Rob Beckham; Cornerstone co-founder Jon Cohen; Bowery Presents partner Jim Glancy; Harvey Leeds, president of the artist management firm Headquarters and a talent buyer for Live Nation; and Brian Manning, agent at Creative Artists Agency (Jonas Brothers, Maroon 5).

Farnham is known for calling out panelists on their past breakout picks and says panelists keep her informed as to how their picks are performing.

CONTROLLING THE KEYS

The "Let 'Em In" panel takes on what is arguably the most controversial topic in live entertainment today: ticketing. The ticket, and the fan connection it carries, is the key to the kingdom before, during and after an event. At the forefront of just about any discussion of ticketing is the question of harnessing the secondary market.

Moderated by Carla Varriale, partner at the sports and entertainment law firm Havkins Rosenfeld Ritzert & Varriale, "Let 'Em In" will break down ticketing with a panel that includes reps from the two (at this point) biggest ticket sellers in the world, Live Nation Ticketing president Nathan Hubbard and Ticketmaster North American president David Butler, along with Jeff Kline, president of Veritix, a pioneer in the world of paperless ticketing; Chris Tsakalakis, CEO of StubHub, the leader in online secondary-market sales; Don Vacarro, CEO of TicketNetwork, a leading ticketing aggregator; Michael Marion, GM of the Verizon Arena in North Little Rock, Ark., an arena on the front line of ticketing issues; and a rare appearance from one of the country's leading ticket brokers, Barry Rudin, president of Barry's Tickets.

THINGS THAT WORK

Live music weathered the storms of a brutal economy quite well in 2009, and the "Good Vibrations" panel looks at some of the most successful concert and tour promotion concepts of the year. Eventful CEO Jordan Glazier will find out what worked, and why, with the decision-makers who helped make these initiatives happen.

Panelists include Shawn Gee, president of music and entertainment at Sports & Entertainment Financial Group (Lil Wayne); Ticketmaster Entertainment senior VP of music services Vito Iaia; C3 Presents partner Charlie Jones (Lollapalooza, Austin City Limits Music Festival); Rockstar Mayhem/Taste of Chaos co-founder John Reese; Live Nation senior VP Brad Wavra; and Progressive Global Agency owner/agent Buck Williams (Widespread Panic, R.E.M.).

Each of these panelists was involved in winners this year, tours and events spurred by creative marketing and effective promotions. Wavra, for example, was part of Live Nation's successful amphitheater promotions for tours like No Doubt's. Iaia oversees Ticketmaster Entertainment's music services division, which runs paperless ticketing programs and successful VIP tour packages and promotions. Widespread Panic, booked and co-managed by Williams, teamed with the Allman Brothers Band in an inspired co-headlining bill. And moderator Glazier's Eventful, a music-oriented social networking site that lets fans "demand" artists come to their city, worked with Kiss in routing the band's current Alive 35 tour.

NEW MODELS

This is the era of new models, and artists, managers, labels and promoters are finding unique methods to reach fans. "Brand New Key" will explore some of the novel and exciting ways the stakeholders are taking control of their own destiny in breaking acts, selling tickets and building careers.

Moderated by direct-to-fan trailblazer 23 Omnimedia president Larry Peryer, the panel's speakers include Paradigm (Coldplay) agent Marty Diamond, Crystal Math Management co-founder Mathieu Drouin, Roadrunner Records VP of touring marketing/artist development Harlan Frey, Cut Merch president Steve Gerstman, Artist Nation president Steve Herman and Dominic Sandifer, president of Greenlight Marketing & Media, a sister company of Red Light Management.

"This panel features a cross-section of wise old hands and young up-and-comers who all have one thing in common: the desire to innovate, tweak and push the boundaries in pursuit of methods and models," says Peryer.

SIGNS OF CHANGE

Corporate sponsorships are playing a major role in the touring industry, as companies increasingly turn to live music to reach coveted consumers. Returning in his role of mod

Bill Chipps will engage an A-team of innovators in unit

The explosion of the festival business is one of the

Finalists For Breakthrough Award Draw Varied But Growing Audiences

BY MITCHELL PETERS

Four diverse acts are vying for this year's Breakthrough Award at the Billboard Touring Conference & Awards, to be held Nov. 4-5 in New York. ¶ The finalists—Il Divo, Kings of Leon, Lil Wayne and Taylor Swift—may attract decidedly different demographics, but all have proved to be equally passionate about building their touring careers in 2009. ¶ The Breakthrough Award goes to the top-grossing act that cracks Billboard Boxscore's top tours recap for the first time in its career and is based on ticket sales reported to Boxscore from Oct. 1, 2008, through Sept. 30, 2009. Previous winners include Miley Cyrus, Josh Groban, Linkin Park, Rascal Flatts and Justin Timberlake.

To the next level: Breakthrough Award finalists, who have cracked the top tours chart for the first time in their careers, include (clockwise from top) TAYLOR SWIFT, LIL WAYNE, KINGS OF LEON and IL DIVO.

IL DIVO

Three primary factors played into the success of classical pop act Il Divo's international touring success in 2009: playing the right-sized buildings, heavy TV marketing and appearances, and nonstop press from group members, says Live Nation senior VP of global touring Mark Norman.

Following arena dates throughout Europe earlier this year, Il Divo supported its latest album, "The Promise," with a 40-plus-date, Live Nation-produced North American arena and theater tour that ended in late July. In markets that didn't have large theaters, the group chose to book scaled-down arenas.

Going into the trek, the group gained momentum stateside by performing on TV shows like "Live With Regis and Kelly" and "Good Morning America," says David Zedeck, Il Divo's booking agent at Creative Artists Agency.

In addition to appearances on popular programs, the group benefited from Live Nation's advertising budget, about 60% of which was spent on TV marketing. The final piece of the puzzle was the willingness of the members of Il Divo—David Miller, Sebastien Izambard, Urs Bühler and Carlos Marín—to promote themselves with nonstop press.

KINGS OF LEON

The rock act Kings of Leon sent a clear message to the concert industry that it's here to stay following a sold-out performance Jan. 29 at New York's Madison Square Garden. The band followed that concert with another run of North American arena shows that ended in late October.

"We were hoping for the explosion that's occurred," says Ken Levitan, Kings of Leon's manager at Vector in Nashville. "But we also wanted to take chances and set it up by playing places like Madison Square Garden."

Prior to playing arenas, Kings of Leon were selling out large theaters, including New York's 6,000-seat Radio City Music Hall. "We booked [the Garden concert] really early on, thinking that was the next level of where we wanted to go everywhere," Levitan says.

The band's recent North American run supports its latest album, "Only by the Night," which has sold 1.4 million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

After a brief break from touring, "we'll play the U.S., then run over to Europe. Then we'll come back to the U.S., then go to Australia. We've just tried to build it."

LIL WAYNE

After his 2008 album "Tha Carter III" sold 3.2 million U.S. copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, Lil Wayne took his success on the road. He ranked No. 15 on Billboard's 2009 midyear list of the highest-grossing tours, earning $23.8 million from 40 shows that drew more than 364,000 concertgoers, according to Billboard Boxscore.

In September, Lil Wayne's tour producer/tour business manager Shawn Gee told Billboard that the rapper's 2008-09 tour drew nearly 804,000 fans to 78 concerts. The numbers make it the most lucrative rap tour that Billboard has ever tracked, topping Jay-Z's 2008 jaunt with Mary J. Blige, which grossed $34.6 million and drew 310,694 concertgoers to 28 shows., according to Boxscore.

Gee, who serves as principal/president of music and entertainment at Sports & Entertainment Financial Group, says the initial strategy was to "prove that Wayne was a real headline arena artist." To accomplish that, he and management hired touring professionals who've previously worked with artists like Beyoncé. The other key component was "overdelivering" to fans. Lil Wayne's 2008-09 tour—promoted exclusively by Haymon Events/Live Nation—was split into three legs and featured support on various dates by Keyshia Cole, T-Pain, Gym Class Heroes, Keri Hilson, Young Jeezy, Drake, Soulja Boy Tell 'Em, Jeremih and Pleasure P.

TAYLOR SWIFT

Before her arena headlining tour this year, 19-year-old countr artist Taylor Swift opened shows for top-tier country acts lik Rascal Flatts and Brad Paisley. Propelled by the success of he chart-topping album, "Fearless"—which has sold nearly 4 mil lion copies in the United States, according to Nielsen Sound Scan—Swift recently completed the first leg of a sold-out U.S arena tour, promoted by TMG/AEG Live.

"We knew she could do the arena business based on the wa that the album was performing," says Greg Oswald, Swift' booking agent at William Morris Endeavor Entertainment i Nashville. While supporting Rascal Flatts in 2008, Swift teste the headlining waters by performing a handful of one-off date in 6,000- to 9,000-seat venues in various markets.

Her Fearless arena tour started April 23 in Evansville Ind., and sold solidy through its last reported date on Jun 12, according to Billboard Boxscore. Beginning in Februar 2010, the singer will play arena dates in Australia befor performing 37 arena shows across North America. "It's me teoric, plus some," Oswald says, "especially when you con sider that it's global."

The morale you raise the most may just be your own.

HOT HALLS

Venues At Multiple Levels Vie For Billboard Honors

BY MITCHELL PETERS

Driven by road warriors like Madonna, AC/DC, Tina Turner, Britney Spears and Green Day, 2009 was another strong year for business at venues across the globe. At the Billboard Touring Conference & Awards, to be held Nov. 4-5 at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York, the awards will recognize the top-grossing venues for the '09 touring season. ¶ Here's a look at the finalists, based on Billboard Boxscore results from Oct. 1, 2008, through Sept. 30, 2009.

TOP ARENA

Despite a difficult economy, "2009 proved to be a strong year for concerts and special events at Madison Square Garden," says Melissa Ormond, COO of MSG Entertainment (MSGE), whose New York building has captured the top arena honor for the past five consecutive years.

"From rock to pop to country, the biggest names in music made the Garden a stop on their tour, including Taylor Swift, the Killers, Green Day, Britney Spears, Beyoncé, Pink, Rascal Flatts, the Dead and Kings of Leon," she says, noting that all of the concerts were sellouts.

Among the year's highlights, Ormond notes, was the opening of the recent tour by the Dave Matthews Band at the Garden in April. Another was Jay-Z's sold-out Sept. 11 benefit performance in support of the New York Police and Fire Widows' and Children's Benefit Fund.

While honored to be among the top-grossing arenas in the world, London's O2 Arena staffers were saddened by the sudden death of Michael Jackson, whose planned 50-show run at the venue would've been the highest-grossing single-concert engagement. "It is tragic that the world did not get to see what would undoubtedly have been a series of groundbreaking shows from the King of Pop," says Caroline McNamara, head of sales at O2 Arena.

Aside from the loss, the O2 Arena has presented major talent during the past year, including concerts by Turner, Spears, Madonna, AC/DC, Beyoncé and Pink. "We are up 25% ahead of last year on the number of shows in the arena, bringing our total up to 175 by the end of the year," McNamara says.

At the Acer Arena in Sydney, "the global financial crisis seemingly has not had much of an impact on the level of concert and entertainment product coming to our part of the world," says Tim Worton, group director of arenas at AEG Odgen, which oversees the operation of Acer Arena. "And even more significantly, the fans seem largely unaffected by it."

Worton says that some of the highlights at Acer Arena during the past year included multiple-show engagements by Coldplay (four), Simon & Garfunkel (three), Beyoncé (two), Pink (two) and the Pussycat Dolls (two) and single-night concerts by Fall Out Boy, Kings of Leon, Brooks & Dunn and the Who.

IN A GLOBAL MATCHUP, VENUES IN NEW YORK, LONDON AND SYDNEY COMPETE FOR ONE TOP HONOR.

TOP AMPHITHEATER

On the strength of the summertime outdoor concert business, three Live Nation amphitheaters are again finalists in this category: Comcast Center in Mansfield, Mass.; Susquehanna Bank Center in Camden, N.J.; and Molson Amphitheatre in Toronto.

"This award belongs to the artists, fans and our great local teams that make these venues successful," says Jason Garner, CEO of global music for Live Nation. "These amphitheaters enjoyed a great summer featuring the best artists in the world and promotions like No Service Fee Wednesday that brought fans out in record numbers."

With a 2009 schedule that included such longtime venue favorites as Phish, Jimmy Buffett, Aerosmith and the Allman Brothers, the Comcast Center "met the challenge of an uncertain economy," says Live Nation Boston senior VP Dave Marsden. "Headlining the venue for the first time were Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band, Slightly Stoopid and Kings of Leon, who played to over 18,000 fans." The Comcast Center won last year's top shed award.

One of the highlights at Susquehanna Bank Center was "watching how young, diverse and strong the audience was for our country shows," says Geoff Gordon, president at Live Nation Philadelphia. "Country touring does an amazing job of building headliners, which makes you feel great about the future of the business."

The Camden shed's annual radio shows were another highlight, he notes. "We have four yearly radio shows with stacked lineups that are either free or extraordinarily reasonably priced," Gordon says. "These dovetailed really nicely into all of the smart packaging this summer, which gave fans a lot of bang for their buck."

This year marked the 15th season at Molson Amphitheatre, and the venue's '09 lineup "reflected the growing careers of young artists [in] country, hip-hop and classic rock," says Riley O'Connor, chairman of Live Nation Canada. "Canada's premier outdoor live music venue continues to be a trendsetter with innovative marketing and fan-friendly ticketing promotions, such as Mega Ticket, four-packs and the wireless box office."

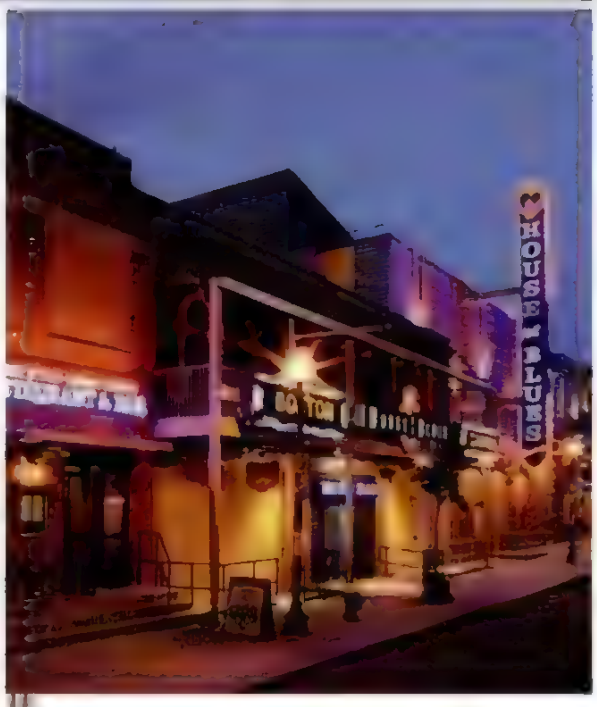
TOP VENUE, 10,000 SEATS OR LESS

As the winners of last year's top award in this category, New York's Radio City Music Hall management team understands firsthand that venues with 10,000 seats are the sweet spot of the concert industry.



"Diverse event bookings" contributed to Radio City's continued success in 2009, including a political speakers series, a sold-out run of Dora the Explorer performances and sellouts by Leonard Cohen and Flight of the Conchords, according to MSGE's Ormond. "Award shows also contributed to our success with the return of the MTV [Video Music Awards] to New York City, as well as the annual Tony Awards," she says.

Proving that MSGE remains a dominant force in New York, the company's WaMu Theatre at Madison Square Garden is also competing in the category, boosted by a year that heralded multiple-night bookings by such talents as comedian Kathy Griffin (four) and Van Morrison (two). Other highlights included performances by Keyshia Cole, Jennifer Hudson and a number of family shows, Ormond says.

"We have great flexibility in booking the WaMu Theatre due to its size and expansive stage, while still providing the intimate feel of a smaller venue," she says. "In the current economic environment, promoters tend to seek out venue sizes such as the WaMu Theatre or Radio City where they have a greater opportunity to sell out and add shows based on additional demand."

The Auditorio Nacional in Mexico City will attempt to regain the top award in November. (The venue won this honor in 2007.) In addition to family fare, the building hosted shows by Luis Miguel, Il Divo, Gloria Trevi, Chicago, Alanis Morissette, Backstreet Boys, Enrique Iglesias, Sarah Brightman, Yanni and Gloria Estefan.

"We have tried to diversify our talent for 2009 to include every type of entertainment to help maintain our programming for 2009," says Maria Cristina Garcia Cepeda, CEO of Auditorio Nacional. "This has greatly helped our tickets sell over the year."

TOP VENUE, 5,000 SEATS OR LESS

Last year, with the help of residency stars Cher and Bette Midler, the Colosseum at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas experienced solid business that helped it earn the top venue award for 5,000 seats or less. (The building also nabbed a top venue award in 2007, thanks to the final year of Celine Dion's five-year residency.)

Between January and September 2009, the Colosseum "maintained its status as one of the busiest houses in the industry with 139 program nights," says Harrah's Entertainment VP of entertainment Scott Schecter.

In addition to performances by Cher, Midler, Jerry Seinfeld, Jeff Dunham and Luis Miguel, Elton John's "The Red Piano" run drew to a close with the final 22 engagements in February and April. "It was a fantastic run that closed very strong and with great fan enthusiasm," Schecter says.

The programming at the Fox Theatre in Atlanta "remains fairly diverse and routinely includes Broadway, concerts, comedy, family shows, arts events and film," GM Allan Vella says, noting that the venue's primary Broadway clients are Broadway Across America and Theatre of the Stars.

Along with Broadway, the theater also hosted a number of comedians and musical acts including Il Divo, Larry the Cable Guy, George Lopez, Death Cab for Cutie, John Legend, Ryan Adams, George Jones, Celtic Woman, Robin Thicke and Jennifer Hudson.

Meanwhile, following a seven-month restoration, the Beacon Theatre in New York reopened in February with two sold-out shows by Paul Simon. "The momentum continued with the Allman Brothers Band igniting the Beacon with 15 sold-out shows in celebration of their 40th anniversary," Ormond says.

The Beacon's primary focus in 2009 was to leverage MSGE's partnerships to give artists performing at the theater national TV exposure. "The Beacon hosted a sold-out performance by the Dave Matthews Band that was televised on Fuse," she says. "The Beacon also maximized MSGE's relationship with Fuse and MSG Network to attract an eight-night run of Steely Dan."

TOP CLUB

Clubs are perhaps the concert industry's most important venues, because they foster developing acts and help build healthy fan bases that ultimately allow artists to move into larger-sized buildings as their careers progress. As such, the top club award is based on attendance and not gross.

Live Nation clubs dominated the finalists in 2008. This year, two of the company's venues compete: House of Blues in Boston and the Fillmore in San Francisco. "The historic Fillmore San Francisco and our new House of Blues Boston are two of the best live music venues in the country," Live Nation's Garner says.

At House of Blues Boston, "we are on track to do more than 200 shows in our first 10 months in business," says John Innamorata, the club's talent buyer. "So it's been a whirlwind year for the entire HOB team, and we are all honored to be recognized in our very first year of operation."

The Fillmore and House of Blues Boston will compete against the 9:30 Club in Washington, D.C., which had another steady year, according to venue co-owner Seth Hurwitz.

"We're doing as well as we ever say," says Hurwitz, who's also chairman of I.M.P. Productions. "I believe that it comes from day-to-day hard work and trying not to book shows we shouldn't and being saddled with having to sell them later. Every show should be looked at as a single avai and a single date."

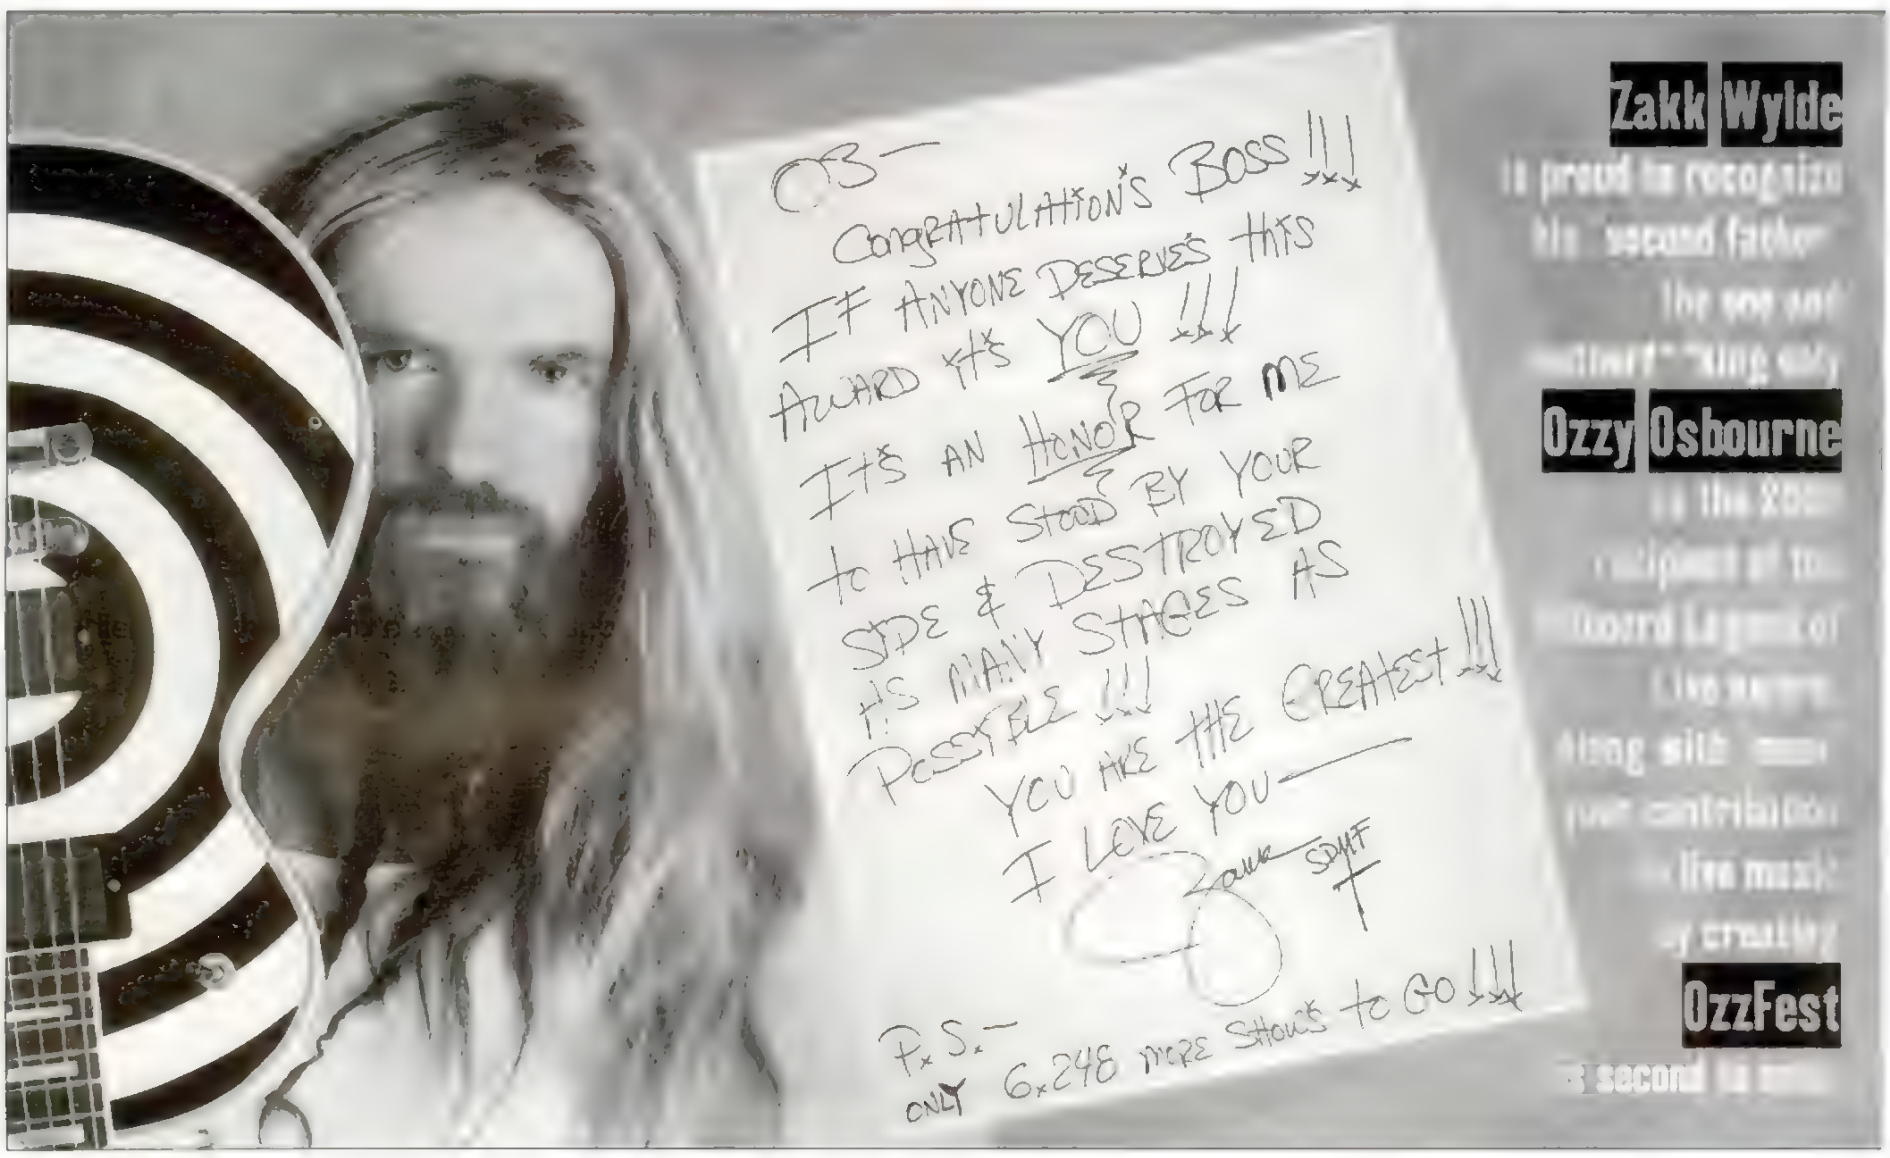
LEGENDARY OZZY

Osbourne Captures Billboard's Legend Of Live Honor



BY RAY WADDELL

Enduring impact: From his early days as frontman of Black Sabbath, OZZY has been a force on the concert scene.

Unlike most rock music tall tales, stories about Ozzy Osbourne contain more truth than myth. But beyond the diary of this madman is the story of one o rock's most unique and enduring frontmen, with fan appeal that transcends generations and popular trends. ¶ And for nearly 40 years and countless shows, Ozzy has won his fans over from the stage, often with a fire hose in hand, wielded with love. ¶ "I love my fans more than they'll ever love me," Ozzy says. "I'm not one of those guys that would ever say that they're privi leged to see me. To be honest, and I'm not trying to be slurpy, it's a privilege for me to see them. My job is to give them the best fucking night out they could possibly have—that's what we're there for. There's no sex, drugs o rock'n'roll that could compete with a great gig. The spark in Denmark: OZZY rocks fans in Copenhagen during a 1983 European tour.

rom >>p46 Billboard will fete Ozzy with he Legend of Live Award at the 2009 Billboard ouring Awards Nov. 5 at the Roosevelt Hotel n New York. The honor recognizes an individ- al who has made significant and lasting con- ributions to live music and the touring business nd acknowledges a commitment to he art of performing live and eaching fans through the con- ert experience. Ozzy has eached—and mooned, and oused—hundreds of thousands f fans, and rocked them all.

"Ozzy's whole thing has lways been touring and per- orming live," says Sharon Os- ourne, his wife and manager.

Simply put, Ozzy has altered he course of rock music and ve performance, first through is work with Black Sabbath nd then as a hugely popular olo artist. His impact on ve music, including pio- eering with Sharon the ulti-act hard rock festival ur Ozzfest, will be felt for any years to come.

Ozzy's career has panned four decades and has sold more than 100 illion albums world- ide—50 million with lack Sabbath and mil- ons more as a solo artist, ccording to his represen- tives. But few would have recast such a future for im during his humble, gritty beginnings in irmingham, England.

"Where I was raised as a young guy there was ot much hope for the future," Ozzy says. As a outh, he says he loved the Four Seasons, Chuck erry and "Little Richard was fucking great."

And then, as with so many artists, the Bea- es came along and opened Ozzy's eyes. "They ame from Liverpool, which was approxi- ately 60 miles north of where I come from," e recalls. "So all of a sudden it was in my rasp, but I never thought it would be as suc- essful as it became."

Sharon first saw her future husband perform ith Black Sabbath as a young teenager, as Sab- ath was managed by her father, Don Arden.

"It was in 1970 at the Marquis in London," she calls. "I remember that it was absolutely packed the club in London, perspiration was dripping om the walls. I don't know whether it was the usic I liked, or rather the atmosphere that the usic got going when it was performed live. I was just trying to make it out: 'What is this?' "

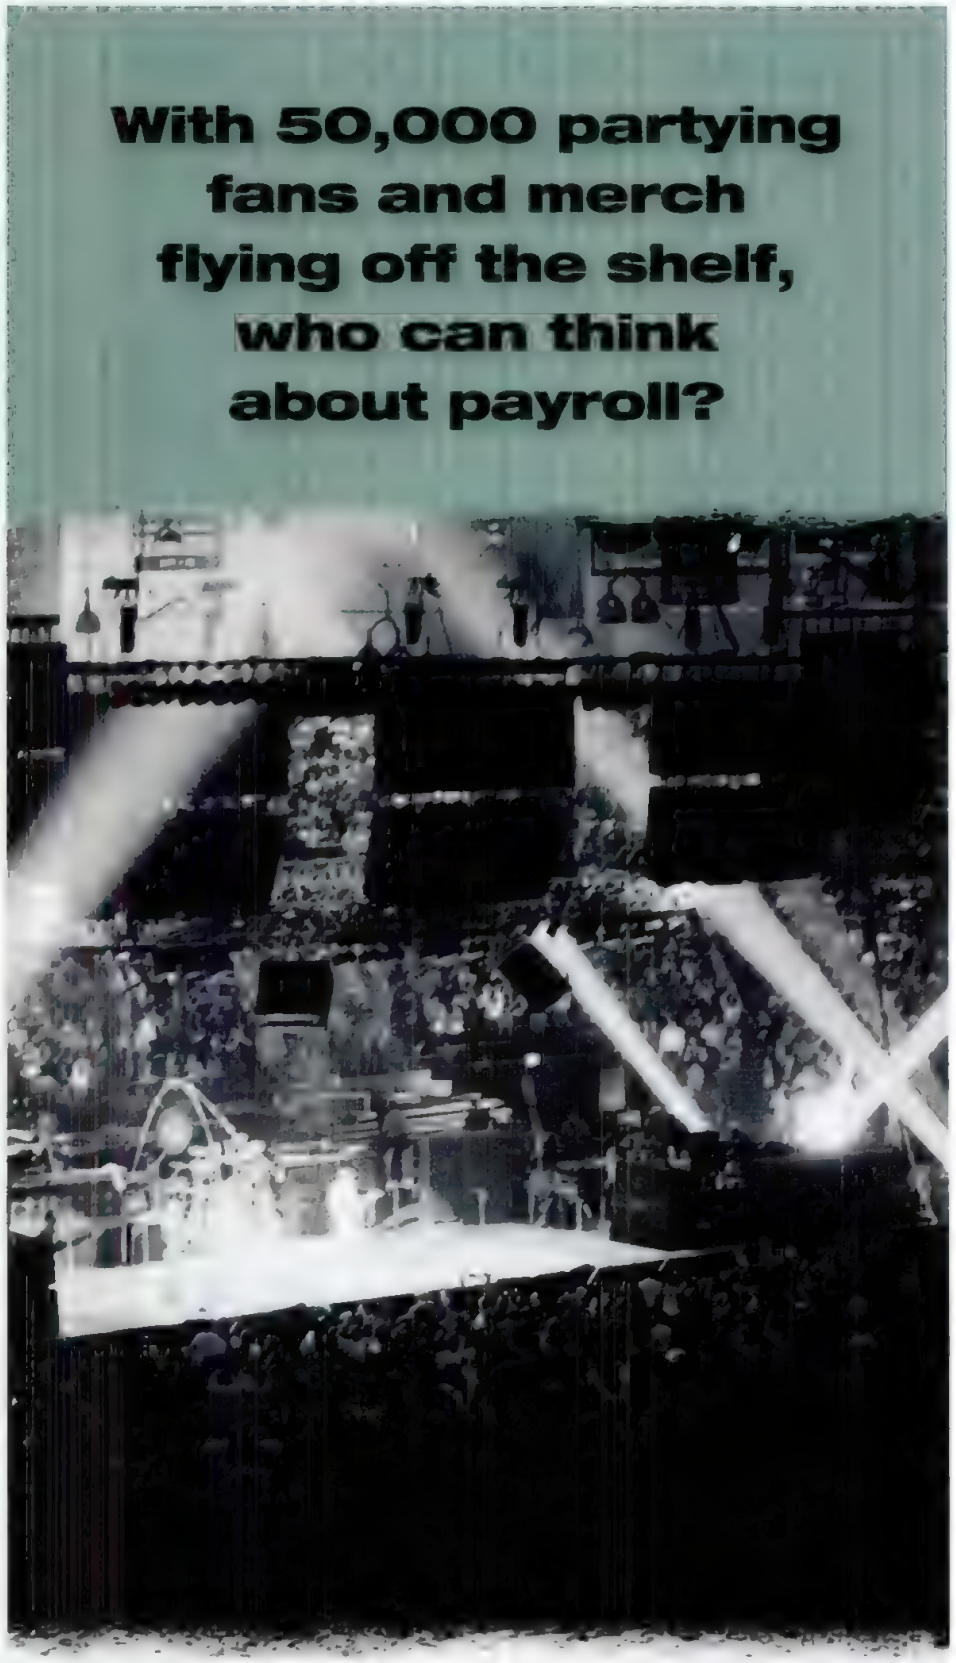
Sabbath fired Ozzy in 1979, reportedly for his legendary excesses. Once again, his prospects didn't look good. In the wake of leaving Sabbath, Ozzy did what Ozzy did in those days. "I remember staying in an apartment in Los Angeles ordering alcohol from the local liquor store and having a single-minded party on my own, a last blast," he says. "And one day Sharon came 'round and I remember her saying to me, 'If you get yourself together, I want to manage you.' I was knocked out. Why would anybody want to manage me? I was an alcoholic fucking drugged-out wreck at that point."

But Sharon saw Ozzy's potential as a solo artist. "Before the Sabbath shows would start, they were just screaming his name over and over. So we knew Ozzy had this huge fan base."

Sharon might have seen the potential, but the music businesses didn't, even if Sabbath had been a hit for Warner Bros.

"We still have a letter from [then-Warner Bros. president] Mo Ostin saying, 'Nice try, Ozzy, but we're going to have to pass on the record'," she recalls. "That would have been [the 1980 album] 'Blizzard of Ozz' that went on to sell probably 6 million worldwide."

Meanwhile, for Ozzy, his legendary onstage behavior came naturally, including spraying the audience with a hose. "I threw a bucket of water into the audience one night. I don't know when, and it went from there," Ozzy says. "I love all that stuff. It's a bit fucking hokey, it's a bit fucking slapstick, but getting the people off is what it's all about. I've had some memorable shows when I worked the audience and it's been sort of a giant party for me. I love that."



'OZZY'S WHOLE THING HAS BEEN TOURING AND PERFORMING LIVE.'

—SHARON OSBOURNE, WIFE AND MANAGER

GOING CRAZY

Touring was always a key in the strategy of Ozzy's solo career, beginning with the Blizzard tour in 1980. "We stayed on the road the first three years of his solo career, touring and touring," Sharon says. "With Ozzy's music and what Ozzy represents, that's the way to do it. That's what kept Ozzy different from all these other groups; we didn't rely on whether the radio was playing the lead track from his continued on >>p50 album, because Ozzy just sold tickets on Ozzy. People wanted to see him perform, people wanted to wear his merchandise."

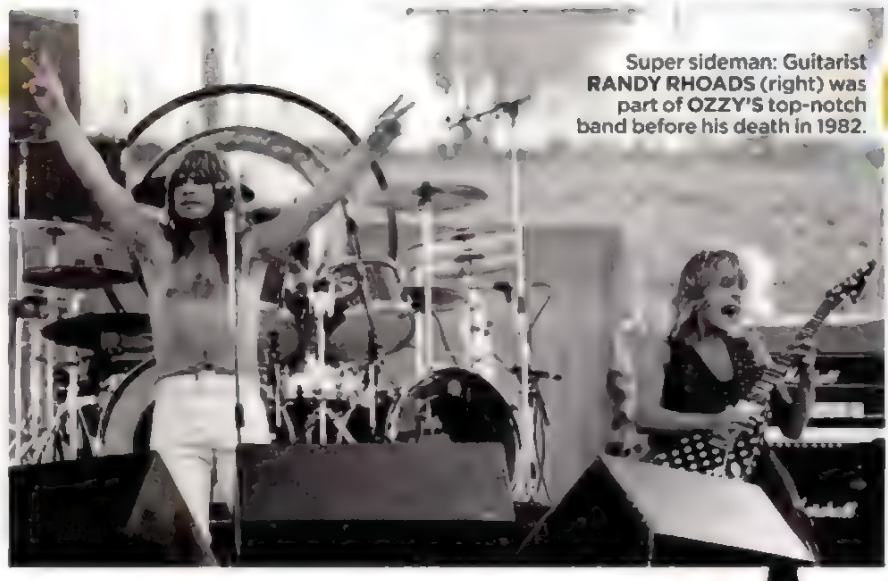
Both in the studio and on the road, Ozzy was backed by top-flight musicians, initially including the late guitar hero Randy Rhoads, who died in a 1982 plane crash. Ozzy's bandmates since Sabbath have been among hard music's best, including Metallica bassist Robert Trujillo and Black Label Society guitarist Zakk Wylde. Ozzy's criteria for bandmates begins, obviously, with the songs. "A lot of musicians want to rewrite the fucking songs, and that ain't right for me—you've got to do the songs as they were written," he says. "They'll say, 'If you change the key to C,' I'm [saying], 'No, no, what key is the fucking song in? Play it in fucking D.' "



The songs from Ozzy's solo career remain staples of his live shows. "Those first two Ozzy albums were magic," he says, referring to "Blizzard" and the 1981 set "Diary of a Madman." "Then Randy got killed and the band broke up and so on and so on."

Despite this setback and many other well-chronicled struggles, Ozzy's popularity "never missed a beat," according to Sharon. "He's gone through flower power, disco, pop, grunge; he survived," she says. "Ozzy wasn't one of these people that had one huge record and spent the rest of his career trying to get that hit again."

Along the way, "I've done my fair share of bad concerts as well as good concerts, and you kind of remember the good ones more than the bad ones," Ozzy says. "When I first played Madison Square Garden with Black Sabbath, when I first played the [L.A.] Forum with Black Sabbath, those memories are good. Then in my solo career I did Castle Donnington, the festival; I did that one time and had a great time."

THE OZZFEST

Ozzfest was launched first as a couple of one-off events in 1996 after Ozzy was rejected from the lineup of what was then the top touring music festival, Lollapalooza.

Super sideman: Guitarist RANDY RHOADS (right) was part of OZZY'S top-notch band before his death in 1982.

"Lollapalooza at that time was very experimental, taking different genres of music and mixing it all together, which I thought was brilliant," Sharon says. "So when they refused Ozzy because he wasn't perceived as being cool enough, I was like, 'OK we'll do something on our own, with our own genre of music, stick to what we know. We'll do our own harder-edged festival.' And we outlasted others, we opened the doors for similar tours, and it's been great."

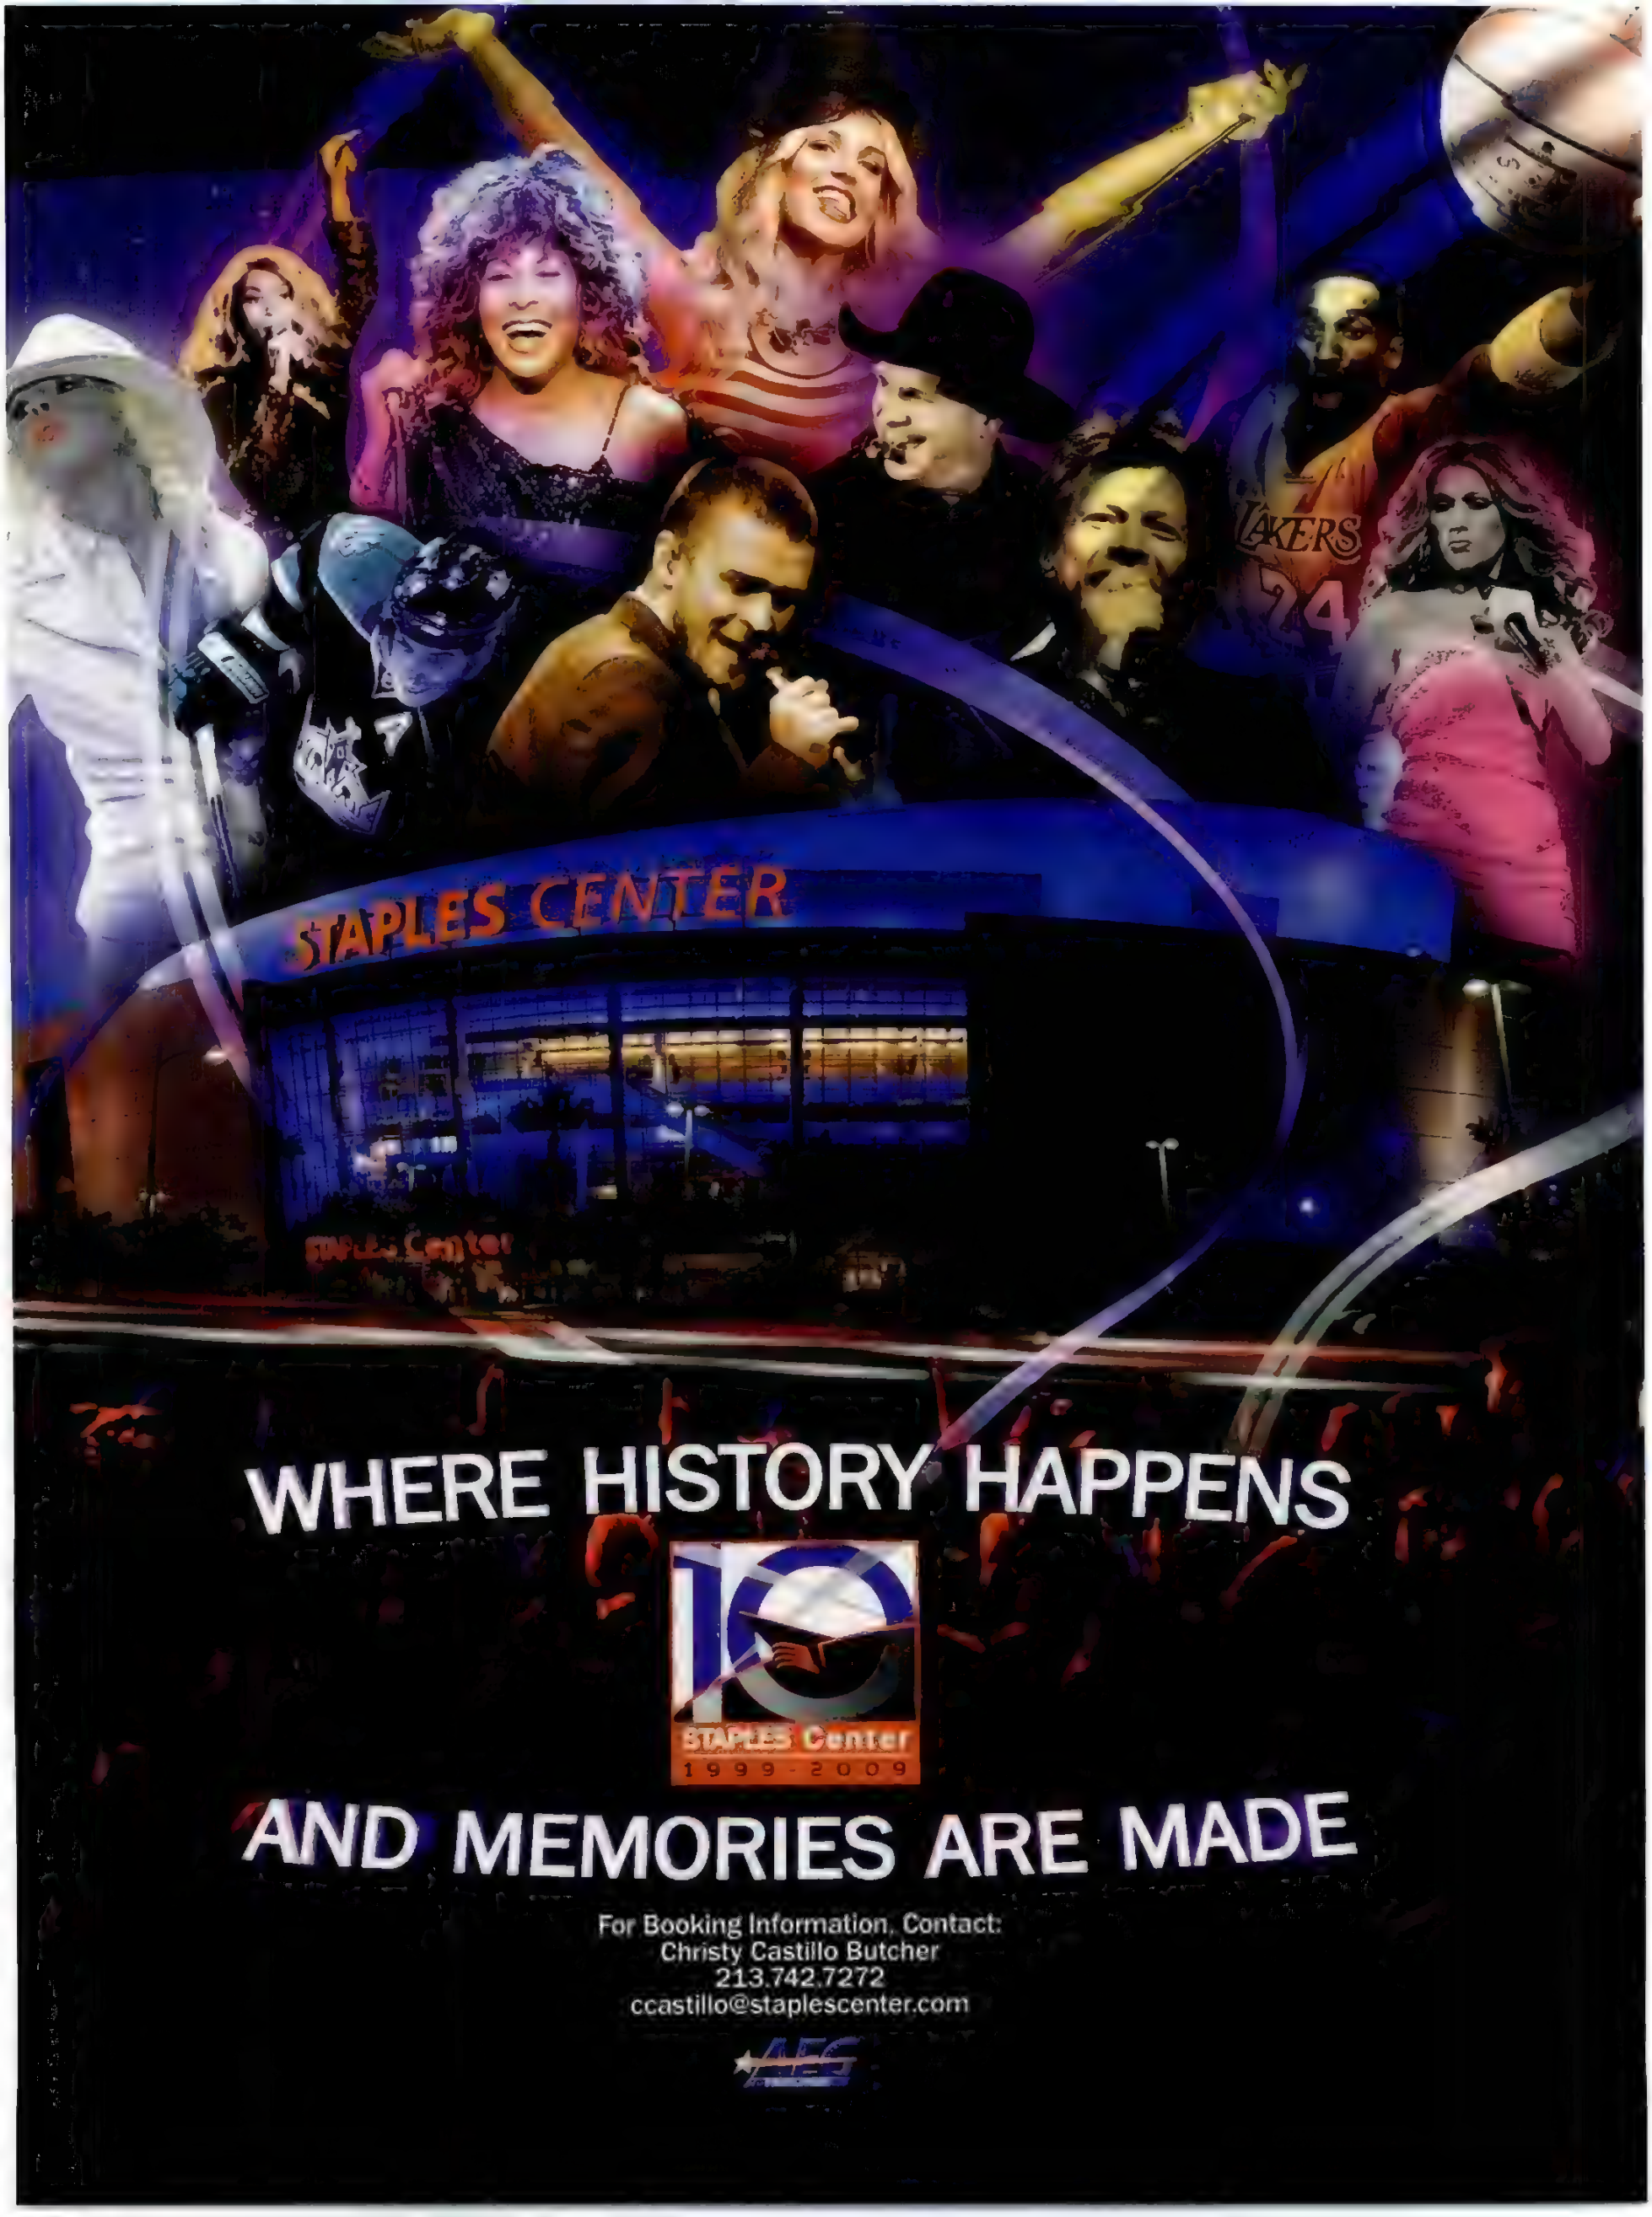
Ozzy says a lot of luck was involved. "When we tried to get on Lollapalooza, they said, 'Ozzy's a dinosaur, there's no room for him,' so Sharon said, 'We'll do our own Ozzfest,' " he says. "A very lucky person, I am."

Ozzfest became the most financially successful of all touring festivals, taking in nearly $205 million and drawing attendance in excess of 5 million to 313 shows since debuting in 1996, according to Billboard Boxscore.

Virtually every hard rock band that has broken through in the past decade spent time on the Ozzfest stages, which is a source of pride for Ozzy. "I'm proud of the fact that we've given a platform for other bands to have a go, because it's getting harder and harder," he says. "I always tried to be fair with the people w were working with. I'm not one of those guys [wh says], 'You're on my show. You've got to fucking bo when you see me.' That's bullshit."

In 2007, Ozzfest became Freefest, a free versio of Ozzfest, moving more than 428,000 ticket which producer Live Nation said at the time wa the largest number of free tickets distributed i the United States in the history of the concert bus ness. In 2008, Ozzfest was staged as a one-off sho with Metallica and Ozzy as headliners, grossin nearly $3.5 million with attendance of 30,000 a Dallas' Pizza Hut Park, according to Boxscore. Th festival took a break in 2009, but Sharon says they' looking at reviving Ozzfest as a tour, and Ozzy says he's ir

"Ozzy loves doing [Ozzfest]," Sharon says. "He moan about it all the time, but that's Ozzy, he loves to moan. Bu he really misses Ozzfest, and that's why we're going to do again, hopefully next year, because I think the economy wi be a little better next year and we won't have to worry so muc whether people will show up."



WORKING WITH THE OZZMAN

New York promoter Ron Delsener says solo Ozz was an arena-level attraction from the beginnin Sometimes, much patience was required whe working with the Prince of Darkness. "In thos days if the crowd wasn't going nuts, he'd thro his hands up in the air and scream, 'Go crazy, g crazy.' It was mostly guys in the audience at th time, all young guys, and they would go crazy b taking the cushions and carving them out of th seats and flipping them through the air like Fri bees toward the stage."

EXPERIENCE THE BUZZ

Festival fever: 'Ozzy really misses Ozzfest, and that's why we're going to do it again, hopefully next year,' says manager SHARON OSBOURNE, shown below with OZZY at the 2007 announcement that Ozzfest would be staged that year as a free event.

om >>p50 Ozzfest. "The wizard of 'z," he says. "I love Ozzy both on and ff the stage. There is never a dull inute, it's a 24-hour show. Working ith him and Sharon is definitely one of y career highlights."

Other promoters express their affection r the Osbournes. "Ozzy's devotion to his udience, as well as his family, is unmatched nd a standard which all others should strive achieve," says Danny Zelisko, resident of Live Nation Southest. "I always look so forward seeing him and Sharon. They ere both there for me as I bated colon cancer, right after haron was getting over the ame disease. [It is] just one of e wonderful examples of how ur lives have interwoven."

Promoters love working with zzy, and seemingly not just beause he makes them money.

"We don't break their balls," zzy says. "Some bands go, 'The uarantee is the guarantee, I don't care if you ad four people there, that was our guarantee.' /e cut them slack. It's always a crapshoot, rely. Sometimes you win, sometimes you lose."

Mostly they win, and Ozzy has also won reject as a performer. "No one turns it on like he oes when he hits that stage," says Randy hillips, CEO of AEG Live, producer of last year's zzfest. "And remember, with Ozzy, it's the Ozzie and Harriet' show—you get Ozzy and haron, and they're an incredible team together. he's a great manager for him and he is iconic. le invented metal in a lot of ways."

Along the way, Sharon has earned a reputaon as a savvy, tough-as-nails manager, a repution she shrugs off. "It's expected to be a hard usinessperson when you're a man, especially this genre of music that we deal in," she says. We're not like the Philharmonic Orchestra, here people are gentle. But when a woman's hard, it's like, 'Whoa, she's a bitch.' Women are not supposed to tough, but you have to be."

Being married in both career and life has its own dynamic. "Sometimes I wonder, 'Is she telling me this as my wife or is she telling me this as my fucking manager?' " Ozzy says. "Sometimes it's great, sometimes it ain't. But you know what? She ain't done such a bad job with me over the years."

Ozzy recently moved his booking responsibilities to William Morris Endeavor Entertainment, where his responsible agent is contemporary music head Marc Geiger, ironically one of the founders of Lollapalooza.

"WME is thrilled that we get to work with Ozzy," Geiger says. "I don't even know what to say, as he has accomplished so much in so many areas, let alone his influence on thousands of rock musicians and fans. We are just lucky to be able to work with him. He will show us all how it's done live again next summer. Ozzy rules."

Ozzy rules, sure, but he would be the first to admit he's not perfect, and the road can become a grind these days. "I want to give the audience my heart and soul every night, but sometimes I pull it off, sometimes I don't," he says. "We're human. I don't use any tricks. I don't lip-synch my voice. What you see is what you get. I've done my fair share of fucking bad gigs. I'm not embarrassed to say that."

Such honesty is typical of Ozzy, who's clearly in a good place these days. "People ask if I have any advice to give them, [but] the only thing I could say really is, 'If you've got any dreams of a better life or you want to do something, hold onto the dream because sometimes they come true,' " he says. "That's the case for me. My prospects for the rest of my life weren't that good when I was a kid. The whole journey for me has been magical." ••••

VANS WARPED TOUR FOUNDER HONORED

Kevin Lyman Recognized For Social Activism

Vans Warped tour founder Kevin Lyman, who marked the traveling festival's 15th anniversary this summer, has long been known for innovative touring concepts. His projects, including Taste of Chaos, Rockstar Mayhem and others, focus on creative partnerships, direct-to-fan marketing and succeeding with rising bands in a tough artist development environment.

What's less well-known is that Lyman's tours always carry a heavy focus on humanitarian and environmental issues.

For considering the needs of others along with the need to produce profitable tours, Lyman will receive the 2009 Humanitarian Award Nov. 5 at the Billboard Touring Awards in New York.

The award recognizes the philanthropic efforts of a touring professional. Lyman's recognition as the 2009 honoree reflects his involvement in a wide range of humanitarian and environmentally conscious efforts.

"After 15 years of working together, and six years as partners together on various projects, there is no one more deserving than Kevin for this award," says John Reese, Lyman's partner on the Mayhem tour. "Kevin consistently thinks of others first. It is an honor to work with him on a daily basis, and I am proud to have the opportunity to enjoy his humanism daily."

The portfolio of Lyman's humanitarian efforts is deep. This summer, the Vans Warped tour began working with MusiCares, the foundation created by the Recording Academy, to assist musicians in times of financial, personal or medical crisis. On Sept. 6, at Warped's 15th-anniversary show in Los Angeles, Lyman presented MusiCares with a check for $50,000. A theatrical film, CD and DVD of the event will further benefit MusiCares.

Since the inception of the Warped tour in 1994 (Vans came on as title sponsor a year later), 25 cents from every ticket goes to Los Angeles-based Hollywood Heart, which provides recreational and educational opportunities to at-risk youth.

In the wake of Hurricane Katrina, Lyma started the Unite the United Foundation to c ordinate philanthropic efforts by fans, artist and industry leaders. Between the Warped an Taste of Chaos tours, nearly $500,000 has bee donated to charity through Unite the United.

Lyman has created blood drives with Mus Saves Lives on the Warped and Taste of Cha tours for the past three years. Warped has bee named best independent blood drive for 200 and 2009 by Music Saves Lives and the Red Cros

On the environmental front, the tou funded Warped Eco Initiative includes rec cling, a solar stage and the use of biodies fuel in all production trucks and buses. Th Warped tour works with Earth Echo to int grate more environmental activities into WE

Warped has long provided free space on fe tival concourses to nonprofit groups, includin Rainforest Action Network, People for the Eth cal Treatment of Animals, My Friend's Plac Music Saves Lives, Music for Relief, Invisib Children, Keep a Breast, Create a Skate, Gree peace, Boarding for Breast Cancer, Amnesty I ternational, Shirts for a Cure and To Write Lov on Her Arms.

This year, for the first time, Warped worke with Living the Dream, a nonprofit that help make dreams come true for children with lif threatening diseases. In 19 cities this summe kids came as Warped guests, where they m artists and received VIP treatment.

"Music has been in my heart, and to have th chance to be around it on a daily basis is ama ing, and to actually make a living at it is even be ter," Lyman says. "Given that music has mad my life better, I am honored to have the chan to give a little back on a daily basis."

Best Of Both Worlds

Dashboard Confessional Releases Two Versions Of The Same Album

Dashboard Confessional's founding singer/songwriter, Chris Carrabba, was having a hard time deciding whether his next album should be a full-on electric rock project or a stripped-down, acoustic affair when he came up with a novel solution. On Nov. 10, when the band releases its sixth album, "Alter the Ending" (Interscope), fans will be able to buy both versions of the same collection of songs.

While the regular edition of the release contains electric versions of songs, the deluxe version comes with a second recording of the same songs done acoustically, for an extra $3. "If you're a Dashboard fan, it either gives you insight into how these songs began or is a stripped-down version of these songs," says Dennis Dennehy, head of marketing and publicity at Interscope. "It's just something different—a broader exploration into what Dashboard is, both the acoustic and the electric sides."

Carrabba says the acoustic set still features the full band, but with a minimalist approach more reminiscent of when the group was mostly a solo project in the early 2000s. "I can even point to one track, and I won't tell you which it is, that was my least favorite track once completed on the full-band version of 'Alter the Ending,' even though other people love it," Carrabba says. "And the acoustic version has become my favorite song on the record."

Dennehy adds that he hopes the double-album will expose the band to a broader audience. "It brings a value to somebody who might first be getting into the band and knows that Dashboard Confessional started with an acoustic lean to it," he says. "And I think it showcases both sides of Dashboard Confessional, which is important to the people who have been fans for years."

The two versions of "Alter the Ending" strike a balance between Carrabba's 2007 release, "The Shade of Poison Trees" (Vagrant)—which his manager and Vagrant Records founder Rich Egan calls a "fans-only" record—and the 2006 "Dusk and Summer" (Interscope). " 'The Shade of Poison Trees' was kind of a between-records record for the fans. It was an acoustic record that we decided to put out on six weeks' notice and we didn't involve our partners at Interscope," Egan says. "We weren't going for big sales debuts, we weren't playing the chart game. It was really more of a solo record."

"Poison Trees," which didn't have a commercial single or extensive promotion, still reached No. 18 on the Billboard 200 and has sold 152,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Dashboard's two records prior to that, "Dusk" and "A Mark, a Mission, a Brand, a Scar," both debuted at No. 2 on the Billboard 200 and sold 559,000 and 922,000, respectively. " 'Poison Trees' was meant for the diehard fans that had been with us from the get-go, and I was confident that they would find out about it without a lot of gregarious marketing," Carrabba says.

Dennehy says that in the past, Dashboard has also benefited from using songs in other outlets, which has included placements in "Spider-Man 2," the MTV show "Laguna Beach" and the videogame "Madden NFL 07." The band currently is featured on the soundtrack to "Jennifer's Body," and Egan says its music also will be featured in upcoming episodes of "One Tree Hill" and "Melrose Place," as well as on the iPhone game "Tap Tap Revolution."

As for the band's upcoming tour with New Found Glory, Never Shout Never and Meg & Dia, Carrabba says the performance style of the new songs will be decided on the fly. "We made an agreement the other day that we were going to do very little planning now for this tour," he says. "I guess we'll just take our temperature in how we feel about the music that night and decide."

He says fans can also expect Dashboard and New Found Glory to play some of each other's music and, according to New Found Glory guitarist Chad Gilbert, the two bands will release a covers album.

Carrabba, who says his interaction with fans has traditionally been one on one, has also been active on Twitter. Although he says he's "very late" to the microblogging site, he's become a prolific tweeter with more than 13,500 followers. (After this conversation, he posted, "The wait here at Conan is filled with interviews billboard and spin. It starting to feel like we have an album coming out!")

"It's interesting to have that kind of access to the audience that has embraced you, and you know as well as I do that you don't get to choose the audience that embraces you," he says. "I've been lucky in that I feel that I can actually relate to the people that do listen to my music on a personal level." • •

with SHIRLEY BASSEY

by PAUL SEXTON

With global career sales estimated at 135 million by her label and a legacy as one of Britain's most beloved entertainers, Shirley Bassey hardly needs to make albums.

But on Nov. 9 in the United Kingdom, Geffen/Universal will release "The Performance," produced by James Bond soundtrack master David Arnold and featuring songs predominantly custom-written for her by Take That's Gary Barlow, the Pet Shop Boys, Rufus Wainwright, KT Tunstall and others.

Bassey's manager, album executive producer Paul Carey, suggested the project after the "incredible" reaction to Bassey's 2007 Glastonbury Festival performance. In July 2008, he met with the 72-year-old artist to explain the concept of "a true Bassey album: classic-sounding yet contemporary."

Carey took the idea to Geffen U.K. president Colin Barlow and, with Arnold onboard, the album took shape. A U.S. release is under discussion.

1 You've had compilations and remix albums, but this is your first all-new record in more than 20 years. Is that because the material wasn't right for you before?

Well, not only that. I'd really retired, to tell you the truth, and was just coming out for special occasions. These writers have brought me back. Only that could have done it, and it was a challenge, because you wouldn't have thought they were my songs. I took them on holiday with me, and I would say, "I can't do this, they're too difficult." But I was listening to the way the writers were singing them, and trying to sing in their key, which never helps. It wasn't until I actually went into the studio, with a piano, and put my voice on, that I started to get excited. I could hear myself. I'm always up for a challenge, and it paid off.

2 How was the experience of working with David Arnold?

He's very gentle. He lets you find your own way. And I love him for allowing my music director, Mike Dixon, to be in the studio, because Mike knows me. He knows the notes I would want to hold. If I hit a note and I like it, I want to stay on it—you can't get me off, but Mike was able to do that.

3 What are your expectations for the album?

We would all love to have No. 1s—oh, my gosh, yes. It would be great, great, great.

4 Will you tour after your Electric Proms performance Oct. 23 at the London Roundhouse?

No. It's very tiring, it takes so much out of you, especially now in the September of my years. You wake up and the whole day is concentrated on the performance, so you have no life. You do your performance, get on your bus and go off through the night to the next town, and that's what it's like until the tour finishes. Then you're in bed for two or three days. I loved it, but I doubt I'd do it again. I say "doubt," because you should never say "never."

5 Why do you thin you still draw bi crowds and have loyal fan base aft all these years?

My down-to-earthnes I think. But if I kne what makes succes I'd bottle it. That's th magic of this bus ness—you don't kno why you're successfu Those critics who s it's an all-gay audien . . . not at all. There mums and dads, a their children brin their children, so it's a fami audience.

6 Do you have a favorit song on the album?

I love all of them. But the P Shop Boys' song ["The Perfo mance of My Life"] got rig into my head and made m sob, and not many songs c that. You can get too carrie away with a song, especial onstage, but you can't be cr ing during every one. When heard that, after doing all th other songs, it was just to much for me. I don't need write a book. The record is m autobiography.

GLOBAL ARTIST

SERENA RYDER

CANADA

By ROBERT THOMPSON

Not only was Serena Ryder blessed with a remarkable voice and a gift for live performance, but the Canadian native also apparently received a generous helping of patience.

Ryder needed all of that fortitude while she awaited the Nov. 3 U.S. arrival of her third full-length studio album, "Is It O.K.," on Atlantic Records, almost a year after its Nov. 11, 2008, release on EMI Music in Canada. The album's rootsy, soulful pop was a solid success in Ryder's home country, peaking at No. 22 on Billboard's Top Canadian Albums chart and selling 35,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. The album also picked up the 2009 Juno Award for adult alternative album.

Ryder spent the wait setting up the album in the United States with numerous tours—including sharing stages with the likes of Paolo Nutini, Eric Hutchinson and Marc Broussard—visits to radio stations and press in publications including USA Today and the New York Post. It's an approach that perfectly suits the record: a collection of gutsy, bittersweet songs that showcase the impressive range of Ryder's voice but take a few listens before revealing their full charm.

"I keep thinking, 'Wow, I haven't seen a record set up like this for a long time,' " Ryder says. "Over that time—and it has been a while—I've found a lot of my success has come organically through meeting people and developing relationships."

According to Atlantic U.S. GM/executive VP Livia Tortella, the label delayed the release to allow Ryder to build her live fan base. Meanwhile, fueled by that touring, the album's lead single, the gruffly emotional "Little Bit of Red," peaked at No. 8 on Billboard's Triple A chart.

"We were set to release the record a little later than Canada, but she was creating a lot of traction with her live show," Tortella says. "She comes from a very cool indie pedigree and we thought it was important she live in that space a little longer."

The album was further delayed to tie in with Ryder's selection for MySpace's "Introducing" program, designed to spotlight new artists. That saw the U.S. video for the second single, "All for Love," premiere o the site Oct. 16, and the albu streamed Nov. 2, alongside other e clusive content.

Atlantic now hopes to crack A radio formats as well as triple A wi the chiming, strident anthem "All f Love," which goes to radio Nov. 3.

"This is where time and patienc works well," Tortella says. "We kno triple A is about music lovers and w know they'll love Serena. But they al like to be first and it can take tim She's taken the time to play the shows, getting to know the program mers, and that takes time."

Ryder has further U.S. and Can dian dates, booked by the Toront based Paquin Entertainment, throug Dec. 5 before heading out for mo touring in 2010.

And while Ryder's early recordin may have been issued on indie labe in Canada, she has nothing but prai for the way in which Atlantic has d veloped her U.S. career.

"You hear tons of things about ho it doesn't work out with major labels Ryder says. "But I feel very blessed have worked with Atlantic. All the l tle steps have worked out ideally."

Channeling the spirit SAHR NGAUJAH as Fela Kuti

FELABRATION TIME

Fela Kuti's Music And Legacy Find A New Audience

tarting Nov. 23, musical theater fans siting New York won't just be anling for tickets to Broadway producons of "Chicago," "Mamma Mia!" nd "Rock of Ages." They'll also have ie chance to see "Fela!"—a new mucal at the Eugene O'Neill Theater bout the influential Nigerian artist ela Anikulapo-Kuti—and choose frobeat music over show tunes, Disey songs and ABBA hits.

What's at stake in this Broadway venire, however, is much more than ecreational tourist dollars. The show ill help find a larger audience for Kuti, ho pioneered Afrobeat from the ounds of James Brown and West frican high-life music, became a potical icon in his native Nigeria and irned the admiration of everyone om Paul McCartney to the Brazilian nger Gilberto Gil before dying in 997. Rikki Stein. Kuti's former comanager and the executor of his estate, ans to capitalize on this exposure to ement his legacy as one of the greatit artists of the 20th century.

"I have an abiding regret that Fela ever achieved the recognition he derved during his lifetime," Stein says. We have a long row to hoe in terms general knowledge and acceptance."

In addition to greenlighting Fela!," Kuti's estate has licensed his italog to the newly revived Knitting ictory Records. The well-timed deal ill result in the reissue of Kuti's omplete catalog—45 albums—durig the next 12 years.

"The industry always talks about ho the next big legacy artist will be," ys Ian Wheeler, label manager of nitting Factory Records. "It should ave been Fela years ago. We're really ying to bring a new audience around e world, and particularly in the U.S., his music."

Up first is the Oct. 27 release "The est of the Black President," a compition of Kuti's best-known material. he set is being sold at previews of Fela!" and at Felabrations, a series of frobeat DJ parties organized by Knitting Factory Records and its marketing partner, Giant Step.

"We're a conduit for raising awareness of Afrobeat," says DJ Rich Medina, who founded the Kuti tribute party Jump N' Funk in 2001 and headlined four of 18 Felabrations nationwide. "It's a way of helping the cause."

"The first thing we're doing is galvanizing the core base of Fela fans," Giant Step founder/CEO Maurice Bernstein says, "then using the messaging to make him relevant in a universal way. You can live in Detroit and understand what [the famous Kuti saying] 'Music is the weapon' means, just like you would Bob Marley's 'One Love' or Marvin Gaye's 'What's Going On?' "

The first batch of reissues, to be distributed by Sony RED, arrive Feb. 2, 2010: "The '69 Los Angeles Sessions," "Live With Ginger Baker," "London Scene"/"Shakara," "Rodoforofo Fight," "Open & Close"/"Afrodisiac" and "Gentleman"/"Confusion." It's not only the first time Kuti's early London recordings with Koola Loobitos will be reissued but also the debut of his catalog on vinyl, which Knitting Factory hopes will attract a new generation of music collectors who listen to African-influenced bands like Vampire Weekend.

"Every day there are traces of new people discovering Fela's music," Wheeler says. "But there has never been a swell of activity around him like this."

Though MCA reissued Kuti's catalog in 2001, Bernstein, who also helped market that series, says its potential wasn't fully realized. "MCA was a major label, and no matter how much they said they loved Fela and how important he was, he was definitely lost in the shuffle," he says.

Stein is all too familiar with labels' conflicted admiration for Kuti. In the mid-'80s, he says he met with every major about the prospect of a deal. "They all received me respectfully and saw Fela as akin to Miles Davis or any of the jazz greats," Stein recalls. "But they'd ask: 'Rikki, which three minutes of this 18-minute song do you want me to put on the radio?' "

"I'd ask Fela to write me a small tune," Stein adds. "He used to say, 'I'm writing African classical music. Don't mess with Tchaikovsky.' "

A deal nearly came to fruition in 1993, when then-Motown Records president Jheryl Busby offered Kuti a five-album deal under his new Africa-oriented label, with a $1.3 million advance for each album and another $1 million for full ownership of Kuti's catalog, Stein says. But after talking to his spirit advisers, Kuti refused to sign until April 1995. Busby left Motown the week of the scheduled signing, and Andre Harrell's first action as Motown's new president was to axe the African label. "[Andre] came from Uptown Music; we needed downtown music," Stein jokes.

In Knitting Factory Records and the producers of "Fela!," Stein has found partners who are more faithful to the cause of growing Kuti's legacy. "Fela!" re-creates the Shrine—the Lagos, Nigeria, nightclub where Kuti played multiple nights each week with his band, Africa 70—in startlingly accurate detail. A collective of singers, dancers and musicians perform Kuti songs including "Shakara," "Zombie" and "Teacher Don't Teach Me Nonsense" behind lead actor Sahr Ngaujah, who has already won an Obie Award for his spot-on portrayal of Kuti in the show's Off-Broadway run last year. The effect is less stuffy theater and more raucous concert—just as its creators intended.

"The Broadway experience can be like sitting with blinders on," "Fela!" director/ choreographer Bill T. Jones says. "This is a show you enjoy as much with your body as with your mind. It's free and communal."

"There was a constant struggle between keeping Fela's music pure and deconstructing it for the audience," says the show's musical director Aaron Johnson, who translated Kuti's Yoruba and pidgin lyrics and is also the conductor/trombonist of the acclaimed Afrobeat band Antibalas. "I've been very pleasantly surprised with the response so far."

Nor have the most controversial aspects of Kuti's life been smoothed over, from his simultaneous "wedding" to 27 women to his clashes with the Nigerian government that led to a brutal 1977 attack on his Kalakuta compound. "It's all out there," Stein says. "Fela has not been sanitized."

That hasn't done anything to quell the show's hype, due in no small part to the fact that tastemaker musicians like the Roots' Ahmir "?uestlove" Thompson have sung its praises. Jay-Z called it "fantastic" after attending a show, fueling reports that the rapper will become involved with it in an official capacity. "There's going to be an enormous incentive for people to investigate Fela when they know that Jay-Z, Will Smith and Alicia Keys are all rabid fans," Stein says. "It's a sign that the underground is moving overground."

And there's even further proof that a Kuti revival of sorts is under way: A screenplay for a biopic is in the works, to be directed by the U.K. filmmaker Steve McQueen ("Hunger").

"I believe that with the show, the film and the reissues, a lot is going to change," Stein says. "We'll see a much wider audience for Fela. There were a million people at his funeral shouting, 'Fela will live forever.' Of course, they were right." ...

Given that last year's "Twilight" soundtrack sold more than 2 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, it's not surprising that the sequel's companion album largely reproduces the first set's alt-rock grab-bag approach—albeit with bigger names befitting the higher profile of "New Moon." Music supervisor Alexandra Patsavas landed top-shelf exclusives from the Killers (the spacey, piano-led "A White Demon Love Song"), Thom Yorke ("Hearing Damage," a tense piece of digital electro-funk) and Death Cab for Cutie ("Meet Me on the Equinox," guitar-guy melancholia at its prettiest). But Patsavas' real accomplishment is using "New Moon" to introduce mainstream listeners to hipster-beloved indie acts: Grizzly Bear contributes a typically gorgeous psych-folk incantation called "Slow Life" (with guest vocals from Beach House's Victoria Legrand), and Bon Iver's Justin Vernon duets with St. Vincent on "Roslyn," which could warm even a vampire's heart.—MW

KRISTINA TRAIN

Spilt Milk

Producer: Jimmy Hogarth

Release Date: Oct. 20

Sorrow over a breakup rarely sounds as exalted as it does on singer/songwriter Kristina Train's debut album, "Spilt Milk," where her lyrics are often awash in isolation. "I start out each morning full of good intentions," she belts on "You're Still Going to Lose," over sparse acoustic plucks that soon give way to exuberant strings. "And watch all those people go home with happy endings/I'll keep on pretending." The album draws from Train's background as a church singer in Savannah, Ga., which would account for the gospel-informed "Call in the Maker" and the soulful "No Man's Land," where a post-breakup Train laments, "I'm so ashamed you're still living rent-free in my brain." The songs on "Spilt Milk" have a tendency to rely on lush orchestration during the choruses, but ultimately Train's words resonate with the listener.—MH

Release Date: Nov. 3

There's no denying that songwriting is among the most cathartic professions. And never has a writer's pain sounded more achingly raw than on Steven Curtis Chapman's new album, "Beauty Will Rise," a collection of songs written about the death of his 5-year-old daughter. (Maria Sue died in 2008 after her brother accidentally hit her with a car in the family's driveway.) The new set examines unfathomable grief, but also celebrates an extraordinary young life. On the song "Heaven Is the Face," Chapman looks forward to seeing his daughter someday in heaven, while on "Just Have to Wait," he sings, "I can't wait to watch your brother's face/When he can finally see with his own eyes/That everything's OK." The track "Questions" asks, "Who are you God?/'Cause you are turning out to be so much different than I imagined/And where are you God?/'Cause I am finding life to be so much harder than I had planned." The lyrics are heartbreaking yet hopeful. Though he's been tested, Chapman's faith remains strong and shines through on songs like "Our God Is in Control," "Faithful," "I Will Trust You" and the comforting "Jesus Will Meet You There."—DEP

Collectors' Choice Music

Release Date: Oct. 20

Consider this a 16-track wake-up call to those who consider Tiny Tim—tip-toeing through the tulips with his ukulele—little more than an entertaining novelty act. Recorded by a 16-year-old Richard Barone at a motel and nearby studio in 1976, "I've Never Seen a Straight Banana: Rare Moments, Vol. 1" showcases the late Tim as an ace musicologist. He rips through a variety of early-20th-century ragtime, Dixieland and folk tunes. The most mind-blowing of the lot is the "Tiny Meets Dylan" medley, a re-creation of a dialogue with Bob Dylan for which Tim performs "Like a Rolling Stone" a la Rudy Vallee and Vallee's "Vagabond Lover" in Dylan's nasal cadence. Barone took the title track back into the studio for some overdubs from famous friends like Terre Roche and Steve Addabbo. But it's hard to improve on the unbridled joy of Tim doing his thing alone that the rest of this set so arrestingly captures.—GG

Mario has a broken heart and he's pouring it all out on his latest set, "D.N.A." Over simple violin strings on "Stranded," he sings, "All that we had is gone in a second/And I'm sad baby/What am I gonna do now?" Accompanied by a drum machine on "I Miss My Friend," Mario belts out lyrics about feeling despair since his lady friend left him, while "Get Out" finds the artist cursing the woman who ripped a hole inside his chest. Even uptempo songs like the first single, "Break Up"—where guest collaborator Gucci Mane raps, "Swag so stupid, still the bitch straight dumped me"—touch on heartache. But the best representation of Mario's desolation comes courtesy of the appropriately titled "Soundtrack to My Broken Heart," where he gripes over a piano-based beat, "This is how it sounds when my heart cries/You won't even come to my rescue."—MC

Release Date: Nov. 10

Bon Jovi had great crossover success after putting a little bit of country into its rock'n'roll with the 2007 "Lost Highway." But the New Jersey group gets back to the business of rocking on its 11th studio album, "The Circle." The band hits a classic Bon Jovi stride out of the gate with the first single, "We Weren't Born to Follow." The song is a common-man anthem that announces, "This ain't about giving up or giving in," drawing its buoyant chorus straight out of its 1988 song "Born to Be My Baby." Also in that mold are tracks like "Work for the Working Man," "Thorn in My Pride" and "Broken Promiseland." Meanwhile, U2's trademark ambient dynamics can be found on "Love's the Only Rule," "Happy Now" and "Learn to Love." Bon Jovi gets political on "Bullet," while "When We Were Beautiful" is wistfully nostalgic, right down to the sha-la-la backing vocals, with its own brief social commentary about living on a continuing prayer. The country-friendly elements are still there—the fiddle and steel on "Live Before You Die," for example—but "The Circle" rides closer to the New Jersey turnpike than the band's "Highway" run.—GG

The great thing about "Glee"—Fox's new glammy musical comedy series—is that when you see the cast has covered "Somebody to Love" on the show's first soundtrack, you know straightaway that they're doing the hit by Queen instead of Jefferson Airplane. Co-created by Ryan Murphy, who put together the high-camp cult fave "Popular," "Glee" speaks to the same constituency that recoiled in horror when Kris Allen beat Adam Lambert on this year's season of "American Idol." And as on "Idol," that aesthetic is most appealingly expressed here in the material that seems the least suited for it—i.e., mushy heartland rock ballads like Journey's "Don't Stop Believin' " and REO Speedwagon's "Can't Fight This Feeling," both of which these kids transform into stylish jazz-hands anthems. Spirited glee-club versions of Rihanna's "Take a Bow" and Jazmine Sullivan's "Bust Your Windows" are nice, too, but they lack a certain revenge-of-the-nerds triumph.—MW

A New York underground jazz scene mainstay, bassist Ben Allison has broken away from traditional jazz into crossover hybrids and developed a distinctive voice. Allison's latest release, "Think Free," is a seamless follow-up to last year's "Little Things Run the World" and delivers sensual-to-mystical lyricism with subtle grooves. His easy-flowing quintet includes the trumpeter Shane Endsley and violinist Jenny Scheinman, who is a remarkably imaginative leader in her own right. But it's the contributions of guitarist Steve Cardenas that help shape and color "Think Free." Case in point: his slow solo through the poignant "Broke." Larger-than-life monsters lurk in Allison's music, with the word "Godzilla" appearing in two song titles. But the sweet-sounding closer, "Green Al"—perhaps Allison's strongest and most alluring composition to date—disperses all fear.—DO

Ever since Them Crooked Vultures cranked up their own hype machine with a 14-second YouTube clip and a brief club tour for which no one could seem to score tickets, people have been clamoring to hear the band's recorded material. "New Fang"—the first single from this collaboration among Queens of the Stone Age's Josh Homme, Foo Fighters' Dave Grohl and Led Zeppelin's John Paul Jones—finally proves that all the buzz is justified. Though the song leans a little heavily toward Queens of the Stone Age's sound due to Homme's distinctive voice, it chugs along on a monolithic blues riff that's more aligned with Blue Cheer than Led Zeppelin. Enhanced by the seamless chemistry of its principles—who currently make up the most anticipated power rock trio since Cream—this track rocks hard.—RH

Recording rock anthems for Hollywood is a move that has worked well for Linkin Park and Aerosmith in the past, and Lambert is well-suited to this power ballad, which wavers between tender and painful. The track is also a bittersweet reminder of the talented late songwriter Natasha Shneider, who was best-known for her and co-songwriter Alain Johannes' work with Chris Cornell and Queens of the Stone Age. In honor of Vinyl Saturday (Nov. 7), the dance-punk outfit LCD Soundsystem is targeting discerning music collectors with an exclusive 12-inch single: a cover of Alan Vega's "Bye Bye Bayou." The very different-sounding original song is from the Suicide frontman's 1980 solo debut, but here LCD's James Murphy transforms it into a hazy dancefloor workout. Murphy takes the swampy, art-damaged rockabilly and anxious delivery of Vega's track and replaces it with a razor-sharp club beat and dubbed-out vocals. What saves this new edition from becoming a generic rump shaker is Murphy's loyalty to Vega's paranoid vision. With masterful synthesizer work, Murphy brings the "helicopters flyin' " and coiled "rattlesnakes" of "Bye Bye Bayou" to life.—RH

Jive

It's probably no coincidence that Chris Brown premiered his new single—a ballad that departs significantly from his recently released "I Can Transform Ya"—on the same day Rihanna debuted hers. While both songs obliquely refer to the demise of their relationship, Brown's is all about his hope for reconciliation. "Where do we go from here/With all this fear in our eyes?" Brown wonders. "And where can love take us now/We've been so far down, we can still touch the sky if we crawl." "Crawl" might be the most straightforward pop song Brown has ever recorded, with a production that's missing the rhythmic appeal of "With You" and "Forever." Removed from the context of his real-life troubles, its lyrics feel cliché, but Brown still displays a deft ability to convey passion and sincerity in his delivery, ultimately selling his message of redemption.—MH

Def Jam

Rihanna has yet to publicly discuss the February altercation with her ex-boyfriend, Chris Brown. But on "Russian Roulette"—her first single since the incident occurred—she seems to touch upon the agony it caused her. "Say a prayer to yourself/He says close your eyes, sometimes it helps," Rihanna sings over a steady pulse. "And you can see my heart beating/You can see it through my chest/That I'm terrified, but I'm not leaving/Know that I must pass this test." The song recalls Rihanna's previous dark ballad "Unfaithful," but it's far grittier in tone—it ends with the sound of a gun being cocked and fired—and her vocals are heavier with emotion. When Rihanna takes a final, dramatic breath before the song's haunting conclusion, the listener instinctively braces, too, wondering what will happen next.—MC

Switchfoot Prepares First Release For Atlantic Records

Best-known for the hits "Dare You to Move" and "Meant to Live," San Diego's Switchfoot is back with its first single in three years: "Mess of Me." It's also the lead single from the alternative rock band's seventh album—and first for Atlantic—"Hello Hurricane" (Nov. 10).

During the three years that Switchfoot has been off the commercial radar, the group has made a dramatic shift from the aforementioned romantic ballads from its 2003 multiplatinum album, "The Beautiful Letdown." The shift is most evident on "Mess of Me," whose raw, forceful sound and edgy, introspective lyrics reveal Switchfoot's darker side on an album that deals with life's stormy side.

"I am my own affliction/I am my own disease/There ain't no drug that they could sell/There ain't no drugs to make me well," vocalist/guitarist Jon Foreman sings. "I made a mess of me/I wanna get back the rest of me."

Foreman notes the "shock element" of "Mess" is what originally drew the group to the song. "We wanted to do something that was a drastic change from anything we'd done before." In addition to Foreman, Switchfoot's members include his brother Tim Foreman (bass), Chad Butler (drums), Jerome Fontamillas (keys/guitar) and Drew Shirley (guitar).

While "Mess" and another track, "Free," showcase the group's expanded musical range, other songs like "Enough to Let Me Go" are reminiscent of the original Switchfoot. Another song, "The Sound," has been selected by Verizon Wireless for its national ad campaign for the BlackBerry Storm 2.

Signed to Columbia until 2006, Switchfoot's last album for the label was "Oh! Gravity." However, the band left the label because it wasn't in tune with its restructuring. "Our music is very communal and to assemble a new team of people to represent it every few month was very counterproductive," Foreman says. "We also wanted th autonomy to explore and rediscover what we love about what we do

After leaving Columbia, Switchfoot built its own studio in Sa Diego. During the next three years, the band tracked 80 songs b fore narrowing the list down to the 12 that appear on "Hello Hu ricane." Atlantic approached the group after listening to the projec recorded with noted producer/bassist Mike Elizondo (Dr. Dr Eminem, Pink). Although Foreman says the band was leery abou dealing with another major label, "it was a dream to have peop who are passionate about songs that you've spent months an months working on."

After a busy summer—co-headlining with Universal Motown Blue October on the Crazy Making Summer tour and opening fo Dave Matthews Band—Switchfoot is gearing up for an even busi fall. The group will kick off its headlining tour Nov. 8 in San Dieg Ending Dec. 9 in Boston, the 18-city trek includes stops in L Angeles, Houston, New Orleans and New York. Along the tou route, Switchfoot will collect donations for local food banks.

In addition to a Nov. 12 appearance on "Jimmy Kimmel Live! Switchfoot is relaunching a new Web site: TheWorldYouWant.com Fans are being asked to contribute stories about people who ar making the world a better place. The band plans to read some o those contributions onstage during the tour. Upcoming appea ances include Yahoo Music's new live concert program, "Max mum Performance Guitar Hero 5." Fans who preorder "Hell Hurricane" will immediately receive a free download of "Mess Me" and four videos. They have five preorder options: a standar CD; a deluxe CD/DVD, with 60 minutes of special footage; vin with a CD; a collector's edition (CD, DVD, an additional CD wit studio outtakes, a limited-edition poster and a 84-page hardcov book); and digital download.

Switchfoot isn't worried that fans may dislike its change i sound. "There's a moment when we come across something bea tiful," Foreman says. "Maybe it's a sunset or we're reminded ju how fragile life is. These moments remind us that we're alive. want this album to be that for people." ••

HOLDING ON

This week, as Taylor Swift's self-titled debut album logs its 157th straight week on the Billboard 200 at No. 60, it becomes the longest-running album on the chart this decade since 2000. The previous record-holder, Nickelback's "All the Right Reasons," spent 156 weeks on the chart. ¶ The feat is remarkable not only because of the set's longevity, but also because it has become increasingly difficult for albums to stay on the chart. In previous decades, it wasn't unusual for an album to spend hundreds of weeks on the tally. However, in January 1997, Billboard changed its charting rules, making it harder for an album to linger. ¶ First, a little history about the Billboard 200. On May 25, 1991, the chart converted from ranked sales reports submitted by retailers to point-of-sale data from Nielsen SoundScan compiled from the actual scanning of album bar codes. It wasn't until Jan. 18, 1997, however, that the recurrent policy—similar to the one now in place—was instituted. As of the latter date, albums that were more than 2 years old were removed if they ranked below No. 100. Last year, the two-year limit was changed to 78 weeks. —Gary Trust

In demand: CHERYL COLE

POP BY TOM FERGUSON

Star Trek

Girls Aloud's Cheryl Cole Steps Into The Solo Limelight

Girls Aloud singer Cheryl Cole's U.K. profile couldn't be much higher. But that's still not enough for Polydor U.K. president Ferdy Unger-Hamilton. "We're not selling her profile," he says. "We're selling her music."

Cole is a tabloid fixture in the United Kingdom, thanks to her marriage to the soccer star Ashley Cole and her role as a judge alongside Simon Cowell on the TV ratings-topper "The X Factor." She's also a model for the cosmetics brand L'Oreal and still a member of Girls Aloud, which has enjoyed 20 U.K. top 10 hit singles since 2002.

At the moment, though, the focus is firmly on Cole the solo star. Her debut single, "Fight for This Love" (Fascination/Polydor), entered the Official Charts Co. listing this week at No. 1 with sales of 293,000 copies, according to the OCC. Cole performed the track Oct. 18 on "The X Factor," with ITV1 claiming an audience of 9.3 million viewers. The biggest-selling single of 2009 to date, it set up the Oct. 26 release of Cole's debut album, "Three Words." Unger-Hamilton expects first-week sales of 120,000-150,000 copies.

Unger-Hamilton handled A&R chores on the album himself and expects it to produce "at least four" U.K. singles. The next one, due before Christmas, is the title track. It was co-written by Cole with session guitarist George Pajon and the Black Eyed Peas' Will.i.am, who also produced and duets on it. "That's a really astounding track," Unger-Hamilton says. "It feels like the next step for pop music."

The title track will be followed in early 2010 by a third single, "Parachute," helmed by the production team Syience. The album will roll out internationally early next year as well, starting with Europe, Unger-Hamilton says. A U.S. release through Interscope will follow at an as-yet-unspecified date.

"Globally, this music has a place," Unger-Hamilton says. "The writers and producers all have enormous track records."

The U.K. campaign involved a heavy online factor: Cole conducted a live video Web chat on MySpace; Bebo users were offered a chance to interview the singer using Twitter to ask her questions. Polydor also targeted online retailers with exclusive content.

At the market-leading retailer HMV, head of music Rudy Osorio reports the album has been "outselling its closest rivals by a margin of nearly two to one" this week. Cole, he says, "has a fantastically broad demographic appeal: kids, moms and dads all like her, as do guys and girls. We always felt this would be one of the best sellers of the Christmas period." •••• avid Nail, whose single "Red Light" is No. 15 n Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart after 35 eeks on the tally, proves that the phrase "overight sensation" oversimplifies things.

Nail's first single, "Memphis," peaked at No. 52 n Hot Country Songs in 2002. But the Mercury ebut album he recorded was never released. He ad signed with the label eight months after oving to Nashville from his birthplace, Kenett, Mo. The town is also home to Sheryl Crow, hose mother taught Nail piano.

Ginny Rogers, music director at country KLB Boston, remembers meeting Nail on a Mercury promotional visit. "I liked his songs back then, but thought he was ahead of his time musically," she says.

When his producer and head of A&R Keith Stegall left Mercury, so did Nail, who moved back to Missouri. The singer/songwriter returned to Music City two years later and eventually signed with MCA Nashville, a Universal Music Group sister to his former label.

Still, success eluded him. Then Nail released a cover of Train's "I'm About to Come Alive" in 2008, which hit No. 47 on Hot Country Songs. But the release of his MCA debut album of the same name, produced by Frank Liddell and Mike Wrucke (Miranda Lambert), was pushed back.

"Red Light," a song about a breakup in unlikely circumstances, was released in March. Weeks later, Nail finally had a slow-but-sure hit.

WKLB is one of the stations having success with the song. "Listeners like story songs and this one is no exception," Rogers says. "Although I think it took them a little longer to catch on because it's a new artist. They got it, though, and that's the sign of a true hit."

The single has sold 132,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. For the week ending Oct. 25, it sold 11,000 downloads—its best sales week yet and fifth straight weekly gain. Meanwhile, the "I'm About to Come Alive" album, released Aug. 18, has sold 22,000 copies.

Nail promoted the single by embarking on a Red Light Road Trip tour across the United States, tied to the Major League Baseball season. While on the road, a camera-toting Nail tried to convince locals he was a major-label artist who wanted to perform for free. The often hilarious webisodes premiered on CMT.com and are also posted on DavidNail.com.

"There's reality TV and there's what we were doing," Nail says. "There was no editing, no crew. You can't script some of the stuff we were doing."

At a recent celebration with friends and fellow artists for his top 15 single, Nail got a little emotional. "There were a couple of moments when I had to take a deep breath and soak it in," he says. "There's no greater feeling than acceptance by your peers." —Ken Tucker

DRAMA LOVER

Four years and as many albums after taking second place in a televised reality competition, the Mexican pop star Yuridia's magic number is still one. Her latest Sony Music release, "Nada Es Color De Rosa," topped Mexico's album sales chart this month. It's also No. 4 on Billboard's Top Latin Pop Albums chart and No. 14 on the overall Latin albums tally, although her single "Irremediable" has yet to be promoted in the United States. (The song is in the top 10 on Mexico's pop airplay chart.)

Yuridia rose to fame as the breakout star during the 2005 season of TV Azteca's "La Academia," a Mexican singing competition/reality show that was also broadcast in the States. Her first two covers albums have sold more than 1 million copies; her first album of original material, 2007's "Entre Mariposas," went platinum on sales of more than 100,000 copies in Mexico.

Yuridia has ramped up her touring by tapping into her "La Academia" experience. "I've performed over a hundred shows in the last year," says Yuridia, who grew up in Arizona and now lives in Mexico City. "I consider myself a very shy person; I used to get embarrassed about everything. But I've grown out of all those things that kept me from doing what I do now."

Possessing a voice both big and sultry, Yuridia is known for her soaring power ballads. And "Nada Es Color De Rosa" is chock-full of them. Italian producer Ettore Grenci's sophisticated, string-laden production lends a more elegant touch. Collaborating songwriters include pop star Julio Ramirez of the band Reik, Monica Velez, backup singer Cecy Leos and Yuridia herself on a duet with the Italian act Sonohra.

"People think of me as the girl who sings power ballads," Yuridia says. "I enjoy them a lot but I've also been trying to grow professionally and do other things." Still, she confesses she'll always connect with "songs that dig inside your heart and make you cry. I really love the drama." —Ayala Ben-Yehuda

Billboard

CHARTS

'Moon' Rises, WEA Rules, Jackson's On Deck

The "Twilight Saga: New Moon" soundtrack rises to No. 1 on the Billboard 200 with 153,000 copies sold (up 33%) in its first full week of release. The Summit/Chop Shop/Atlantic album debuted on last week's chart with 115,000 sold after an early release on Friday, Oct. 16, pushed it onto the list with just three days of sales. Meanwhile, Tim McGraw's 10th studio album, "Southern Voice," arrives in the runner-up slot with 137,000 copies.

"New Moon" is the second soundtrack this year to top the Billboard 200, following "Hannah Montana: The Movie."

"New Moon" is the sequel to "Twilight," whose soundtrack debuted at No. 1 on the Nov. 22, 2008, Billboard 200 with 165,000 sold.

McGraw's opening frame of 137,000 sold for "Southern Voice" is off a bit from the 325,000 first-week copies sold of his last studio set, the 2007 "Let It Go." The new album's arrival is the smallest debut sales week for a studio set from the country artist since his 1995 album "All I Want" began with 110,000 sold at No. 4.

Sales for "Southern" are enough to give McGraw the No. 1 slot on Top Country Albums—his 12th chart-topper on that list. All 13 of McGraw's Billboard 200 entries—10 studio albums and three greatest-hits sets—have reached the top 10.

FANTASTIC FOUR: With the "New Moon" soundtrack, Tim McGraw, Michael Bublé and Jay-Z at Nos. 1-4, respectively, on the Billboard 200, WEA Distribution holds down the top four slots on the chart for the first time since the Sept. 7, 1991, list. That's when the company held court with Metallica's "Metallica" at No. 1 followed by Natalie Cole's "Unforgettable." Color Me Badd's "C.M.B." and Van Halen's "For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge."

It's also the first time a distributor has claimed the top four spots since the June 30, 2007, chart. That's when Universal Music Group Distribution ruled with Toby Keith's "Big Dog Daddy," Fabolous' "From Nothin' to Somethin'," Paul McCartney's "Memory Almost Full" and Maroon 5's "It Won't Be Soon Before Long."

THIS IS REALLY IT: Next week the Billboard 200's Hot Shot Debut will likely be Michael Jackson's "This Is It," the companion set to the music film of the same name. Industry prognosticators say the Epic Records album—which was released on Monday, Oct. 26—could shift 275,000-300,000 copies.

With numbers like that, Jackson could be a sure thing for the No. 1 slot on next week's Billboard 200. If the King of Pop hits No. 1, it will be his sixth chart-topper, following "Thriller," "Bad," "Dangerous," "HISTory" and "Invincible."

Jackson already owns the best-selling album of the 2009 calendar year with "Number Ones," with 2 million-plus sold and counting. "Thriller" is the year's 11th best seller (1.1 million) and "The Essential Michael Jackson" the 15th biggest (986,000).

"Number Ones" is the only album to sell more than 2 million copies in 2009, though Taylor Swift's "Fearless" (with 1.9 million) is nipping at that threshold. And, with the expanded "platinum" edition of "Fearless" impacting the chart next week, expect the album to sail past the 2 million mark.

A year ago this week, only one album had sold more than 2 million copies: Lil Wayne's "Tha Carter III," with 2.6 million through the week that ended Oct. 26. All told, only 13 sets had sold 1 million copies at this point last year, compared with the 14 to do so this year. Of those 14, two are catalog sets from Jackson.

TAKE A BOW: This week, our still-young Top Cast Albums chart (viewable at billboard.biz/charts) turns 200 weeks old. At No. 1 for the 58th nonconsecutive week is the original Broadway cast recording of "Jersey Boys," which spends its 198th straight week on the 15-position chart. The album arrived on the list two weeks after the tally bowed in the Jan. 14, 2006, issue. Two sets have stayed on the tally since bowing in the chart's premiere week: the original Broadway cast recording of "Wicked" and the original cast recording of "Mamma Mia!," which are now Nos. 2 and 3, respectively. ••••

10 The Target- and iTunes-exclusive Virgin album arrives with 27,000 copies. The singer last graced the tally in 2007, when "Introducing Joss Stone" debuted and peaked at No. 2 with 118,000 sold.

12 After the duo performed on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" Oct. 23, the album rebounds with 22,000 sold (up 14%), surpassing its No. 14 debut two weeks ago. On Top Gospel Albums, it holds at No. 1 for a third week, but with Greatest Gainer honors.

13 This is the German rock band's highest-charting album (22,000 copies). Previously, the group's best rank was its 1998 chart debut, "Sehnsucht," which peaked at No. 45 on the strength of its only U.S. radio chart hit, "Du Hast."

45 As new stock of this boxed set reaches retailers, it returns to the chart, with nearly 11,000 copies sold.

50 The singer performed on HSN Oct. 17 to promote the shopping network's exclusive version of this album, which comes with five bonus Christmas songs. The set sells 10,000 copies, returning to the list after nearly a year.

Beyoncé notches her 13th top 10 this decade, tying Ludacris and T-Pain for the second-most top 10s since 2000. The artist with the most in that span is her husband, Jay-Z, with 14.

The first solo effort by the California native, who provided uncredited vocals on Flo Rida's No. 1 "Right Round" earlier this year, makes a big leap on this list, prompted by a 31-13 climb on Hot Digital Songs (70,000 sold, up 80%).

Its first-week digital sales (34,000), coupled with a strong week at radio (48-33 on Hot 100 Airplay, up 22%), results in the track making the chart's biggest jump.

The "American Idol" runner-up's first post-show chart effort starts with 47,000 downloads. The song is from the soundtrack to the upcoming film "2012" and will also appear on his debut album, "For Your Entertainment," due Nov. 24.

Available as an exclusive Verizon download for two weeks, the track sells 29,000 downloads and also opens on Hot Digital Songs at No. 44.

OWL CITY BANKS FIRST NO. 1

Minnesota native Adam Young, better-known as Owl City, sits atop the Billboard Ho 100 with his debut charting song as "Fireflies" rises 7-1. The track earns the Greates Gainer/Digital honor, moving 2-1 on Hot Digital Songs (196,000 downloads, up 26% and enters the top 30 of Hot 100 Airplay in just its third week (61-42-28) with an audi ence bump of 21%. On the Billboard 200, the act's album "Ocean Eyes" has a compa rable spike (up 31%), pushing it into the top 10 for the first time (20-8). Owl City's label Universal Republic, which hadn't scored a Hot 100 No. 1 until three weeks ago, goes back to back as "Fireflies" replaces Jay Sean's "Down" at No. 1. —Silvio Pietroluongo

KEYS AND GAGA MAKE STRIDES

Alicia Keys scores the longest active top 10 streak at Adult R&B as "Doesn't Mean Anything" rises 12-7, earns the Greatest Gainer honor and becomes her sixth straight trip to the chart's upper region. Keys was tied with Maxwell for five straight top 10s among active streaks. "Anything" is Keys' 12th top 10, tying her with Whitney Houston for the second-most among females. Both are one track behind Mary J. Blige, Toni Braxton and Mariah Carey, who lead with 13 each.

On the Rhythmic chart, Lady Gaga becomes the fourth female to earn four top 10s from a debut album as "Paparazzi" rises 16-10. Her "The Fame" set has also placed "Just Dance" (No. 3), "Poker Face" (No. 5) and "LoveGame" (No. 7) in the upper tier. Prior to Gaga, Christina Aguilera, Beyoncé and Fergie launched their debut albums with four top 10s. —Raphael George

The Whispers have their highest-charting album since 1995 as "Thankful," the act's first inspirational release, bows at No. 25 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums. The set also starts at No. 3 on Top Gospel Albums (see chart, page 76).

The track is Gucci Mane's first hit as a lead artist and Warner Bros. first chart topper in a dozen years on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop. The rapper was originally featured on Mario's "Break Up" which reigned for six weeks.

The pair swaps top 10 track and lead vocalist roles this time around, with Usher on the upper tier. The trio's Songz at top 10 and Drake's fourth.

19

For the first time in his career, Birdman has connected top 20 singles as a lead artist. He previously peaked at No. 10 with "Always Strapped," featuring Lil Wayne, in June.

Available exclusively on iTunes, "The Bridge" debuts at No. 125 on the Billboard 200 and at No. 4 on Heatseekers Albums. The set will make a sizable gain when the physical version is released Nov. 10.

The most talked-about lead single from Future's R... enters this chart as Rihanna's highest solo debut. It also starts at No. 100 on the Billboard Hot 100 with 2.5 million in audience.

USHER GRABS 18th TOP 10

Earning the Greatest Gainer/Airplay honor with an increase of 4 million impressions in its fourth week on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs, "Papers" rockets 12-5 to give Usher his 18th top 10 on the chart. The song's speedy ascent ties his fastest-rising top 10 as a lead artist this decade. His overall chart résumé includes three top 10 debuts in the '90s, including "Nice & Slow," which was the last song to bow at No. 1 in 1998.

"Papers" also climbs 14-10 as the Greatest Gainer on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop. It's his 18th top 10 on that chart and his 14th since 2000.

GOOD WORKS

AWBOX HELPING ITS OWN

hen Callum Robbins was born in 2006 with spinal muscu-atrophy, doctors didn't expect him to live past the age of 2. t Callum, the son of Jawbox guitarist/vocalist J. Robbins, fied the odds and will celebrate his 4th birthday in January. Since Jawbox disbanded in the late '90s, Robbins has played other groups and opened a recording studio. But the in-me from those projects was little match for the mounting ctors' bills.

"J. and his wife were in a tight financial bind," says Jawbox ssist Kim Coletta, who founded DeSoto Records. To help r bandmate, Coletta posted a PayPal link on her label's Web e (desotorecords.com) requesting small donations to the bbins family. She noticed a spike in donations after send-g an e-mail to about 3,000 of the band's fans and friends.

Coletta says, "Even when people didn't have a lot of money, ey brainstormed creative ways to do some fund-raising . . . It kes me understand even more that J. is a really beloved fig-e in the independent music scene." She adds that the efforts ve also helped spotlight a lesser-known disease. According Coletta, enough money has been raised for the Robbins fam-to afford a wheelchair ramp for their Baltimore home.

Meanwhile, Jawbox will perform for the first time in 12 years c. 8 on "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon" to help promote the ssue of the band's 1994 album, "For Your Own Special Sweet-art," which will be released Nov. 24 through a partnership tween DeSoto Records and Dischord Records.

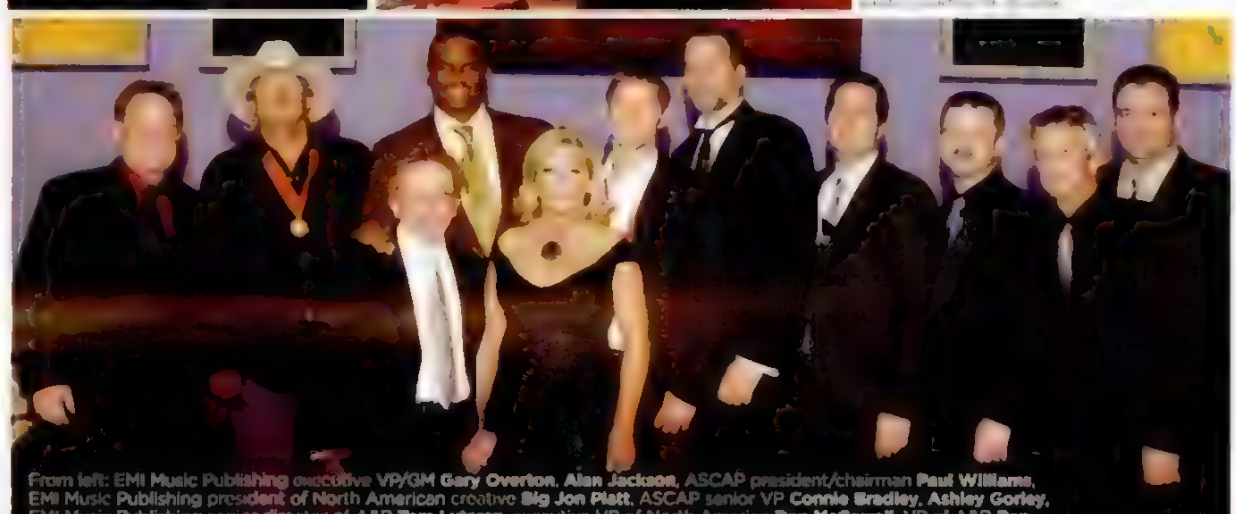
MONTGOMERY GENTRY

COUNTRY DUO RETURNS



INSIDE TRACK

After spinning off a couple of No. 1 country singles from the 2008 "Back When I Knew It All," Montgomery Gentry is finishing work on the duo's seventh studio album. The set is due in early 2010, with a first single expected to be released shortly.

"We've got all the songs cut and four or five of them mixed," Troy Gentry says of the currently untitled 10-song set, which will have a bonus song for digital buyers. He says the album's sound is "a little bit of everything from the past." He adds that one song, with the working title of "Shotgun Wedding," "sounds like a newer version of 'Hillbilly Shoes,' " the first of the duo's 17 top 20 country hits.

The album is produced by Blake Chancey and recorded in Nashville, and Gentry says he and Eddie Montgomery "wrote a little bit more on this project than they did in the past," including a the patriotic-themed "Freedom Never Goes out of Style" with Gary Hannan and Phil "Philbilly" O'Donnell. Neil Thrasher, Ira Dean, Rivers Rutherford and Tommy Karlas also wrote for the album, and there aren't any guest spots planned.

Gentry says the duo and Columbia Nashville are in the midst of determining a first single from the album, which should be out in time to be considered for next spring's Academy of Country Music Awards.

Lessons From Down Under

South Africa Should Use The 2010 World Cup To Promote Its Musicians

BY PHIL TRIPP

In 1983, the crew of the Australia II embraced Men at Work's hit "Down Under" as the theme song for its successful run at the America's Cup championship. Nearly two decades later, another sporting event—the 2000 Summer Olympics in Sydney—brought Australian artists and music to the world's attention.

The recording industry and the Australian Trade Commission embraced both events as export-promotion opportunities for the renewable resource of intellectual property (i.e., music and artists), reaching out to overseas markets through mass-media coverage and post-event marketing.

Now a major sporting event is poised to provide many of the same benefits to another country's artists. When South Africa hosts the FIFA World Cup in 2010, its contemporary music scene will have the chance to bask in the global spotlight. The tournament will provide a brief but potentially valuable window of opportunity.

South Africa has a vibrant contemporary music culture that sings in English and indeed rocks. While Johnny Clegg and Juluka may be the most familiar to overseas music fans, other acts like the hard-edged Seether and new stars BLK JKS have also made inroads into new markets. Plenty more diamonds are waiting to be unearthed and exported. But it's not going to happen by chance. It must be propelled by a synergy of government and industry using this event to gain critical mass.

We've seen it before in Australia, with trade missions and government subsidies for attendance at trade fairs like MIDEM and South by Southwest, touring support and other programs to bring Australian music onto the world stage.

And you can witness similar public-private partnerships in the presence of the Dutch and the Scandinavians at MIDEM; the Brits, Irish and Scots at SXSW; French, Spanish and Brazilian contingents at SXSW and Popkomm; and the Canadians seemingly everywhere.

Speaking on this topic at the sixth annual Moshito Music Conference in Johannesburg in September, I was blown away by the diversity and quality of the performances at the live showcases. But I also learned of the obstacles that South African artists face in trying to reach a larger, international audience, including post-apartheid political and societal challenges and the perception of their home as a "third world" country.

South Africa's contemporary music scene, like those of Australia, New Zealand and even Hawaii in the past, can sometimes be overshadowed by its traditional roots. Australia's most recognizable and memorable hits before the '80s were "Tie Me Kangaroo Down Sport" and "Waltzing Matilda," much as hula dancing, falsetto singing and ukuleles largely defined Hawaiian music for foreign audiences before the emergence of such acts as Jack Johnson, Pimpbot, Fiji or even Israel Kamakawiwo'ole. Sometimes it's harder to break through the cultural tourism market when you shout rather than chant, rock rather than strum and appeal to youthful ears rather than nostalgic memories.

South Africa has an opportunity to prevail over such challenges by using the World Cup to raise the international profile of its artists and musicians. The tournament will provide ample chances to do so, including opening ceremonies broadcast to billions and local concerts that could entertain millions of tourists.

Before global media outlets turn their attention elsewhere, South Africa's recording industry should enlist the support of the government to make hay while the sun shines on this country and set in motion a perpetual harvest of its rich music. ••••

TALK RADIO

Labels, Stations To Face Off On Performance Royalties

With the passage of the Performance Rights Act by the U.S. House and Senate judiciary committees, the recording industry has come closer than ever to having the issue of radio performance royalties reach the floor of Congress.

Before the bill reaches that stage, however, representatives from industry trade group the musicFirst Coalition and the National Assn. of Broadcasters are scheduled to hold two weeks of talks from Nov. 17 to Dec. 1 at the request of judiciary committee members, including House Judiciary Committee chairman John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., and Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. The talks will be led by members and staff of the two judiciary committees.

"We are confident that an acceptable and mutually beneficial resolution to this longstanding disagreement can be found," the committee members said in a letter to musicFirst and NAB.

That level of optimism is almost surely misplaced, given that labels and artists have tried in vain for nearly seven decades to get U.S. radio stations to pay master copyright owners and performers for the music they broadcast.

Still, a failure by the two sides to reach some level of mutual accommodation or even the postponement of a full House or Senate vote on the legislation isn't likely to mark the end of the recording industry's efforts to eventually secure radio performance royalties.

"We are pleased to have gotten this far, but we are not looking for any moral victories," RIAA chairman/CEO Mitch Bainwol says. "We will keep our foot on the gas until it is the law of the land."

While the NAB says it is willing to talk with Congress about the bill, it isn't clear if it would negotiate with musicFirst to shape the terms of a fee structure or any other aspect of the bill.

New NAB president/CEO Gordon Smith, a former two-term U.S. senator from Oregon, is seen in Washington, D.C., circles as a moderate with a smooth, polished approach that contrasts sharply in tone from the bombast of his predecessor David Rehr, who abruptly left his post in May after less than three-and-a-half years at the helm.

[illegible] before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee.

Rehr's now infamous proclamation during a July 2008 radio industry conference—"I'd rather slit my throat than negotiate"—created public-relations headaches for the NAB and rubbed some lawmakers the wrong way.

"The fact that we are willing to sit down reflects that there has been a change in leadership and a change in style with Gordon's approach versus his predecessor," NAB executive VP Dennis Wharton says.

But there doesn't appear to be a change in position. At the NAB's annual radio convention in September in Philadelphia, broadcasters made it clear to Smith that defeating the Performance Rights Act should be his top priority. Still, refusing a request by powerful members of Congress to discuss the topic could get Smith off to an awkward start as he tries to convince lawmakers that imposing new fees would jeopardize radio's ability to serve the public.

Moreover, the NAB says 252 House lawmakers and 27 U.S. senators have signed a nonbinding resolution stating that "Congress should not impose any new performance fee, tax, royalty or other charge relating to the public performance of sound recordings on a local radio station."

Prominent recording artists have gone to Washington to speak out in favor of performance royalties, including Tony Bennett, Sheryl Crow, Sheila E. and Billy Corgan. While a majority of House members have signed the NAB-supported resolution, the RIAA's Bainwol says its nonbinding status renders it "essentially meaningless." He points out that the resolution is out of date, since the proposed legislation has been altered to address the radio industry's concerns that it would cripple smaller stations and their ability to serve local communities.

For example, the act requires annual fees of $100 for stations with less than $50,000 in annual revenue, $500 for stations with revenue between $50,000 and $100,000, $2,500 for stations with revenue of $100,00-$500,000 and $5,000 for stations with revenue of $500,000 to $1.25 million.

That covers 80% of U.S. stations, leaving only the remaining stations with annual revenue in excess of $1.25 million to negotiate a rate, according to SoundExchange executive director John Simson.

The head of one of radio's largest groups, speaking to Wall Street analysts during its Nov. 2 earnings call, said that performance royalties are a "whack-a-mole" issue. "It's going to be brought up every year," Cumulus Media CEO Lew Dickey said, "so we are going to be talking about this for a long time." ••••

Film And TV Music Confab Highlights Power Of Synchs

The overarching theme of the Hollywood Reporter/Billboard Film and TV Music Conference was that it isn't just music supervisors who recognize the value of music in TV and film—it's now common knowledge among creative talent, producers and network executives.

During the conference, held Oct. 29-30 at the Beverly Hilton in Los Angeles, executives from Fox and Columbia joined "Glee" music supervisor P.J. Bloom, cast member Lea Michele and the show's music producer Adam Anders to discuss what's driven sales of millions of "Glee" song downloads and enthusiasm for two forthcoming soundtrack volumes.

Rather than keeping the "Glee" pilot a secret, Fox presented it to as many music publishers and record labels as it could to get them onboard for clearances from the get-go, according to 20th Century Fox Television head of music Geoff Bywater.

Now that "Glee" is a hit, Bloom said the show is fielding synch pitches from artists who don't normally allow their music to be used on TV.

Bywater said a key evangelist for the show has been Columbia/Epic label group chairman Rob Stringer. "He looked at the trailer—not the pilot, but the trailer—and said, 'Let's get the attorneys on the phone,' " Bywater recalled. "How many shows going into their eighth episode have sold 2.5 million downloads? He had the commitment, the energy, the expertise. It was pure genuine enthusiasm."

Mary J. Blige, who addressed the conference about her original song for the forthcoming film "Precious: Based on the Novel 'Push' by Sapphire," also credits a strong evangelist for convincing her to play a role: director Lee Daniels, who, she said, "made me pull every single thing from my guts."

"He said, 'I know you have it in you,' " Blige recalled. "I finally got to the point where the very next day I just went in and threw up on the record."

Blige added that she was interested in pursuing other film projects and said she would "put my all" into a long-discussed Nina Simone biopic.

On a much lighter note, music supervisor Alexandra Patsavas told the audience about pulling together the soundtrack to "The Twilight Saga: New Moon." She said that the fact that the artists featured on the soundtrack could easily share a bill together was a key part of the album's success.

"There's definitely a cohesion within the music of the movie," she said.

Chop Shop owner Patsavas also served as a producer of the "New Moon" soundtrack, which features exclusive tracks from Thom Yorke, Bon Iver & St. Vincent, Lykke Li and Sea Wolf, among others. In addition, she produced the soundtrack to the previous "Twilight" movie, which has sold 2.2 million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

Finally, actor Sacha Baron Cohen and his brother, composer Erran Baron Cohen, filled the room with laughs as they discussed their collaborations on "Da Ali G Show," "Borat" and "Brüno."

The keynote began with stories about the Cohen brothers' humorous childhood antics, which included Friday-night skits for their 90-year-old neighbor, where Erran would provide Yiddish tunes on t piano with Sacha singing alo in a chicken voice. The disc sion then moved to their fi and TV collaborations in cent years.

Sacha described his alter e Ali G as "probably the fi comedy character in Engla that saw himself as a mu cian—but obviously he had talent as a musician. So t challenge for Erran was come up with the music of G." At the time of the HI program, drum'n'bass w popular, so Erran used e ments of the genre and mix it with "fart" noises and oth odd sounds.

"It was funny but also rea Sacha said. "You listened t and said, 'All right, this guy one of these dreadful wanks wannabe DJs." He also not that Erran is "great at maki something real but comic at t same time, which is what were trying to do with t shows and characters."

VEXING VISAS

Stricter U.S. Immigration Enforcement Sparks Worries About Touring Impact

LONDON—Tour managers and producers are warning that stricter enforcement of U.S. immigration regulations is complicating efforts by overseas artists to schedule live gigs in the States.

The U.S. Citizens and Immigration Services outlined in October a more restrictive interpretation of its application procedures for musicians seeking "O" and "P" visas—temporary work visas issued to solo acts and groups, respectively.

Many solo performers had become accustomed to obtaining "O" visas for up to three years, while groups had customarily obtained "P" visas for up to a year. But in recent months, USCIS has begun embracing a stricter approach to entertainment visas, limiting the term of a visa to the specific length of a tour and stipulating that applicants must provide extensive documentation detailing their itinerary.

In an e-mail advisory earlier this month to managers, booking agents and other clients, the New York-based visa and immigration services agency Traffic Control Group recommended that "artist management immediately begin to proactively organize and prepare as much supporting paperwork regarding confirmed itineraries as possible including contracts, deal memos or any other documentation . . . in order to avoid delays in the adjudication of all new visa petitions."

While it doesn't mark a change in existing regulations, USCIS' new approach could make it more difficult for artists, particularly emerging acts, to build grass-roots support by hampering their ability to schedule follow-up visits soon after a successful debut tour.

"It's going to get harder for new acts to build a fan base in the United States," says Ian Watt, whose London-based firm Machine Management co-manages Mika and represents U.K. alt-rock act Lightspeed Champion.

Fruit Pie Music Productions in London, which represents singer/songwriter Imogen Heap, almost had to postpone Heap's fall U.S. tour because details of USCIS' more restrictive approach —which had been quietly introduced during the summer— only emerged at the last minute, according to Kumar Kamalagharan, director of touring at Fruit Pie, which has also worked with Razorlight, Feeder and Jack McManus.

After negotiating with U.S. immigration authorities, Heap eventually obtained the three-year visa she had applied for months in advance and is set to begin her U.S. tour Nov. 8 in Santa Barbara, Calif.

But Kamalagharan remains gloomy about the impact that USCIS' stricter enforcement of visa rules will have on other performers.

"I don't think we'll be able to afford to send acts to the next [South by Southwest (SXSW) conference] because of these stupid rules," he says, adding, "If aspiring artists, the lifeblood of the industry, can't afford to go to the U.S., how will they cope?"

Tighter enforcement has also had "tremendous impact" on Latin American touring acts, says immigration attorney Michael M. Felix of Santa Fe Springs, Calif., whose clients include regional Mexican artists. Although the law for adjudicating these cases is the same, Felix claims that USCIS representatives in California have "chosen to selectively enforce the law very, very tightly on all these performers."

USCIS representatives didn't return calls seeking comment. The new approach regarding "O" and "P" visas also affects how artists apply for them. For either visa, a U.S.-based "sponsor," such as a manager, label or promoter/booking agent, has been needed to file a petition to USCIS through an attorney. But according to the Traffic Control Group advisory, USCIS has begun "severely limiting" who may submit a visa petition on behalf of performing artists, taking a narrower view of who it views as a qualified "agent."

Failure to submit the proper documentation or to use a proper agent to file a visa application could result in additional processing costs that would have to be paid on top of standard visa charges, which vary from $2,000 to $6,000, depending on the size of the entourage.

Several U.K. artists scheduled to play at the CMJ Marathon in October in New York pulled out at the la minute, citing problems wi the new visa guidance. Th included 2009 Mercury Pri winner Speech Debelle a singer/songwriter V.V. Brow both clients of the Windi Agency in Chicago.

Company president Tom Windi says CMJ and other U.S. sho would've been an ideal way of introdu ing Debelle while her Mercury win w still fresh and would've helped bu momentum for shows around SXS next March.

"SXSW would have been great Speech Debelle," Windish says, addi that he now faces the prospect of st ing from scratch, as "the excitement a attention from the Mercury Pri would have worn off in four five months' time."

CMJ Network VP artists and events M McDonald also expres frustration. "[Whe artists who make pla well in advance still get nied at the last minute," says, "it means there isn't time to place them, and the venue/promo suffers from the lost revenue."

Performing arts organizations in United States, including the League American Orchestras in Washingt D.C., are working to roll back USC stricter enforcement of visa rules.

The league's VP of advocacy Heath Noonan says, "Canceled tours have economic impact on U.S. venues, U.S. artists performing alongside in national artists and on disappoint ticket-paying audiences."

REACH FOR THE 'SKY'

BSkyB Enters Growing U.K. Music Subscription Market

ONDON—The Pay-TV giant SkyB's launch of its music ubscription service Sky ongs is expected to increase ie pressure on a host of rival .K. companies that are due roll out competing products the coming months.

BSkyB, which is partly wned by Rupert Murdoch's ews Corp., dominates U.K. nd Ireland pay-TV broadisting with 9.4 million cusmers, making its entry into usic subscriptions a move atched closely by labels.

"I very much look forward seeing what an [Internet rvice provider (ISP)] of this liber is going to be able to ing to the music business," ys Eric Daugan, senior VP digital business at Warner usic Europe. "The more ople there are to sell music, e more likely we will grow e pie."

Repertoire comes from all four majors, plus Beggars Group, PIAS, the Orchard, the Independent Online Distribution Alliance and VidZone Digital Media. Sky Songs GM Justin Moodie says the launch followed lengthy negotiations to develop a business model that satisfied the labels.

"We want to make an affordable digital music option for everybody," he says, declining to provide revenue splits.

First announced in July 2008, the Oct. 19 beta launch of Sky Songs comes as other ISPs, including BT and Virgin Media, are preparing to offer competing music subscription services. In addition, the free, ad-supported streaming service Spotify already markets an ad-free subscription service priced at £9.99 ($16.50) per month, while the music streaming service We7 expects to soft launch a subscription service in December.

BT and Virgin Media haven't disclosed when they expect to launch their respective music services. BT declined to comment, while a Virgin Media spokesperson would only confirm it was "making good progress." But We7 CEO Steve Purdham says he expects a series of new subscription services to enter the U.K. market in the next 90 days.

"[Sky Songs] will have a positive impact," Purdham says, adding that while its launch alongside existing services like Spotify, We7 and Last.fm may initially cause some consumer confusion, it will allow British consumers to "make valid choices."

'The more people there are to sell music, the more likely we will grow the pie.'

BSkyB's ability to "market aggressively and across multiple channels" will be a key factor in Sky Songs' performance, says Adrian Pope, director of digital and business development at the distributor/label group PIAS.

The satellite broadcaster excels at "defining a price point or a pricing mechanism" that appeals to consumers, Pope says. "They're [also] very good at getting incremental revenues out of their consumers."

Sky Songs gives customers access to more than 4 million tracks for download and ad-free streaming. For £6.49 ($10.75) per month, customers get unlimited streaming and the option to download either a £6.49 album or 10 digital rights management-free tracks. An additional £7.99 ($13.20) plan offers unlimited streaming and a £7.99 album or 15 tracks. Sky Songs' Moodie says the service also expects to introduce two additional price options, bringing the service closer to the four-tier platform first announced 15 months ago.

Customers can also purchase music on an a la carte basis, starting at 65 pence ($1.03) per track and £6.49 per album. BSkyB's 2.2 million U.K./Ireland Sky Broadband customers are eligible for a free one-month subscription to Sky Songs. BSkyB is also eyeing the possibility of introducing Sky Songs to mobile, console and set-top box platforms.

"There's lots of people out there who love music but aren't necessarily comfortable with computers," Moodie says. "We want to say hello to them." ••••

When I Write The Book

Amoeba Music Co-Founder Pens Record Store Novel For Teens

While label executives occasionally write books about the record business, it's far rarer to see someone from music retailing knock out a tome about record stores.

But that's what Amoeba Music co-founder Yvonne Prinz has done. She hasn't written a business book but rather a teen-targeted novel titled "The Vinyl Princess," due Dec. 22 from HarperCollins.

"The Vinyl Princess" is about a 16-year-old girl named Allie who works at a struggling music store called Bob and Bob Records and has a passion for collecting vinyl.

The book "is like 'High Fidelity' for teens—that's the story I started out to write," Prinz says, referring to the 1995 Nick Hornby novel about a London record store owner. "Nobody has the inside track of working on a record store like I do. I felt very qualified to write this book."

She may have a point. First, she boasts an enviable music-retailing pedigree, having co-founded Amoeba in 1990 with her husband, David Prinz; Marc Weinstein; and Mike Boyder. Today, Amoeba is one of indie music retailing's most beloved chains, with California locations in Berkeley, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Although the publisher wanted the latte book first, "I thought the vinyl book shou hit now and they let me have it this way Prinz says. "The timing was good because lot of cool bands are putting their stuff ou on vinyl now."

To write "The Vinyl Princess," Prinz says sh drew upon her five years of experience wor ing as a cashier at the original Amoeba sto on Telegraph Avenue in Berk ley. Like "High Fidelity," Prinz book tries to capture the feel an indie record store, includin colorful neighborhood perso alities based on the custome who came to shop at Amoeb "Berkeley has an incredible stre scene, homeless scene and dru scene," Prinz says, noting th they all found their way in Amoeba and informed her book.

Now that she's written a novel about teenage vinyl collector, what does she thin about the resurgence of the format? "Peop are going back into stores," albeit not in hu numbers, she says, noting that Amoeba "not counting on vinyl to save the store. W have always sold vinyl and their sales have increased for us."

To help promote the book, Prinz has a sumed the identity of the Allie cha acter at TheVinylPrincess.co where she blogs as her book's pr tagonist. Most of the blog posts a reviews of vintage albums like "T Velvet Underground and Nico" a the Byrds' "Mr. Tambourine Ma

One post from earlier this ye was titled "And Now a Word Abo Censorship," featuring Prinz/Al railing against Wal-Mart for not c rying Green Day's "21st Centu Breakdown." The Vinyl Princ blogs: "That Walmart would su gest to a recording artist that th require them to edit the content their art in order for it to be acce able in their soulless mega-mons stores, which profit off the backs slave labor in developing countri is beyond absurd."

That wasn't quit fair criticism of W Mart, which does ask artists to chan their lyrics but sim maintains a policy not carrying CDs th come with warni stickers. When I point this out to Prinz, s responded, "But I a writing as a 16-year-o girl who hates the c porate world."

Spin the bl[illegible]rcle: YVONNE PRINZ and her forthcoming teen novel 'The Vinyl Princess' (inset).

Prinz is also the author of Raincoast Books' Clare tween novel series, which includes "Still There, Clare," "Not Fair, Clare" and "Double Dare Clare." She signed a two-book deal with HarperCollins for "The Vinyl Princess" and another book, "All You Get Is Me," about a girl who moves with her dad to an organic farm.

South Philly farewell: Confetti rains down on fans at the Wachovia Spectrum as Pearl Jam wraps up the venue's final concert on Oct. 31.

Philly Soul

The Spectrum, An Early Anchor Of Arena Rock, Goes Out In Style

ow this is how you close a building.

The venerable Philadelphia Spectrum, one the arenas that built arena rock, will be dolished early next year to give way to Philly ve, a retail and entertainment complex being veloped by the Cordish Cos. and Comcast-pectacor, the Philadelphia-based sports and tertainment company that owns the Wachovia pectrum and the adjacent, more odern Wachovia Center.

But the Spectrum didn't go wn without a party—a year-ng commemoration that in-uded sendoff concerts by acts ke Pearl Jam and Bruce pringsteen, final games by e Philadelphia Flyers and the ers, and innumerable trips wn memory lane.

Among the highlights of the campaign were creation of the RememberTheSpectrum.com eb site, a commemorative book in partner-ip with the Philadelphia Daily News and the documentary "Building a Memory" that aired Comcast SportsNet.

Comcast-Spectacor VP of PR Ike Richman d his team also partnered with local radio sta-ns to create unique closing events like the our Band Can Perform on a Concert Stage" ntest, "Final Basketball Game" and the "Last or Hockey Game." In late October, the Spec-m opened its doors to the public for a free ast Stroll" tour of the facility. Every day on the lendar had a corresponding significant event t matched up with the building's history, and chman and his team made sure the local edia new about them.

Live Nation Philadelphia chairman Larry gid produced the Spectrum's Final Farewell ncert series with Neil Young, Tina Turner, een Day, Hall & Oates, two shows by the ad, four by Pearl Jam and six performances Springsteen. The series also included Kings Leon and Dane Cook's "The Last Laugh." arry really led the charge that it would be re-y cool to play the Spectrum again," Comcast-ectacor president Peter Luukko says.

Cool, yes, but not as profitable. "We all make ore money at the center," Luukko says, hich shows you really how special the Spec-m was to these artists, because they were rtainly willing to take a little less money to y there again."

The Spectrum had long ago passed the rch to the Wachovia Center, just as leg-dary arenas like Chicago Stadium; the "Fabulous" Forum in Inglewood, Calif.; and the Boston Garden have passed from the scene or become overshadowed by shinier showplaces. The same dynamic led to the demolition of Shea Stadium in New York and the pending demise of Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., which closed out their runs with concerts by Billy Joel and Springsteen, respectively.

On The Road

RAY WADDELL

The closing of these historic rock venues affects the artists that made their bones at these locations. "Obviously, the end of the Spectrum, with its narrow backstage corridors, shortage of space and wonderful feel and great audiences, is filled with emotion," Springsteen's longtime manager Jon Landau says. "And tearing down Giants Stadium is so symbolic for us that Bruce wrote his recent song, 'Wrecking Ball,' about his feelings about the end of his neighborhood football field, where he has played 24 times."

Comcast-Spectacor and Global Spectrum owned and operated the Spectrum and the Wachovia Center together for 13 years and only decided to shutter the Spectrum when the Philly Live project arose. Without major sports tenants and with most big tours opting for the center, the Spectrum wasn't self-sustaining anymore and would've required millions of dollars in capital improvements in coming years, Luukko says. "Frankly, if we didn't have this [Philly Live] development, we would have thought of a million excuses to keep the building open because of the emotion involved."

Pearl Jam's Halloween show was the last event at the Spectrum. "We'll start gutting the building from the inside out, then start selling seats and various memorabilia for charity and to offset demolition costs," Luukko says. The bulldozers won't arrive until next spring.

For all the fond tributes paid to the Spectrum, the market will be fine with bidding it farewell because the Wachovia Center is a more comfortable, fan-friendly building and because it's more profitable with its luxury suites, twice as many concession points-of-sale and other amenities. "The general experience at the center is so much better," Luukko says. "But the memories of the past can never be replaced."

An Exclusive Retail Deal Leads To A Massive Hit In Colombia

Colombia's current top-selling artist doesn't have a record label.

Instead, Carlos Vives released his new album, "Clásicos de la Provincia II," exclusively through Grupo Exito, the Columbian equivalent of Wal-Mart. In less than a month, the set—retailing at 14,000 pesos (approximately $7), less than half of what front-line releases usually cost there—has sold 200,000 copies, according to Exito. That makes Vives a 10-times-platinum seller in a market where platinum now translates to 20,000 copies shipped.

Vives' success has attracted attention from journalists, talk show hosts and even politicians who are marveling at his ability to sell music in a country full of artists where legal music sales are plummeting.

An editorial in Colombia's leading daily, El Tiempo, said: "[His] sales are a record as well as a vote of confidence in the legal marketplace."

Vives is a superstar in Colombia, where he rose to fame in the early '90s with his role in the soap opera "Escalona" and his album "Clásicos de la Provincia," a collection of traditional Colombian vallenatos performed with a signature fusion of rock, pop and even jazz.

Signed in Colombia to the indie Sonolux, Vives went on to strike an international deal with EMI Latin and became a global superstar and Colombia's first major musical export. But after his EMI contract expired five years ago, Vives wasn't able to reach an agreement with a major.

"It was a moment of transition for the industry where no one wanted to bet on anything," says Manuel Riveira, Vives' manager and business partner since 1992. "And since no one seemed interested in Vives' project, we did it on our own."

Riveira and Vives decided to return to their roots. Instead of recording new material, as Vives had done for his last several albums, they dug through Colombia's traditional songbook of vallenatos and selected 15 songs. They recorded in Miami, as they usually do, flying Vives' band up for the sessions, and again attempted to close a deal with a major. When a deal couldn't be reached, Riveira—taking a page from Target and its music deals in the United States—approached Exito.

The result is the most successful album in Colombia in years. "Clásicos de la Provincia II" reportedly sold 42,500 copies its first day, a record for the country. At the same time, the first single, "Las Mujeres," sent to radio after the album's release, remains at No. 1 on Colombia's airplay chart after four weeks.

Riveira and Vives own their catalog and masters in Colombia. They made a 360 deal with Exito that encompasses album releases, an eight-city stadium tour that kicks off Nov. 19 and multiple promotional and marketing campaigns featuring Vives aimed at driving store traffic.

Exito has to purchase at least 320,000 Vives CDs—220,000 copies of "Clásicos" and 100,000 from his catalog—that will be available exclusively to the chain for a year. Exito purchases directly from Vives, who in turn directly manufactures the CDs, which keeps costs down for all involved and fuels sales. This week, the chain ordered another 50,000 copies of the album.

To prevent exports of the album—deals outside Colombia have yet to be negotiated—customers can buy only two copies of the CD.

Neither the album nor its tracks are available digitally, and Vives and Riveira haven't yet negotiated any deals for digital rights.

With Vives' momentum showing no sign of abating, Riveira is now weighing his options in the United States, deciding whether to sign with a major or an indie, or to look for a similar business model stateside, where he and Vives also own the masters to two of his previous albums—"Clásicos de la Provincia" and "La Tierra del Olvido."

"Generally, the story of big acts belongs to a label," Riveira says. "The success of this deal is in that Vives owns his rights and can go straight to retail." ••••

Fast, Cheap And In Control

UMLE Offers An Inexpensive Sample Of Several Artists

A sprinkling of bang for a handful of bucks. That's what Universal Music Latin Entertainment has planned for the fourth quarter, with a new EP series designed to capture the noncommittal hit-seeker.

Beginning Nov. 17, "6 Super Hits" will offer six songs by one act on each EP, from Akwid, La Factoria, Luis Fonsi, Xtreme, Paulina Rubio, Gloria Trevi, Makano, Cristian Castro, Eddy Lover and Fanny Lu. The suggested retail price for the CD is $5.99 (though the digital price could be lower). "If it goes well, we'll introduce several key regional Mexican titles," says Machete Music GM Mickey Hernandez, who is heading up the project.

Unlike most hits packages, "6 Super Hits" will feature current or very recent singles, and in some cases new songs or remixes not already included on an album. La Factoria's and Makano's EPs contain the new songs "Amiga" and "Su Nombre En Mi Cuaderno," respectively. Fanny Lu's contains the current single "Celos"; a version of the song with reggaetóneros J. King & Maximan; her last single, "Tu No Eres Para Mi"; a remix of the song with Angel & Khriz; her breakout hit, "No Te Pido Flores"; and a cut from her last album.

"We're trying to capture the customer that isn't inclined to buy a whole album for $10 or $11 or isn't that familiar with the artist," Hernandez says. "Fans are going to go buy the full album, but people who might like one or two songs, we're telling them, 'This artist is good,' 'You can only find this remix here,' or 'These new songs will be featured on the album five months from now.' "

Universal's non-Latin labels released a set of three Best Buy-exclusive EPs last year: Weezer's "Six Hits" (25,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan), 3 Doors Down's "Six Pack of Hits" (28,000) and Nelly's "6 Derrty Hits" (14,000). Unlike those titles, however, "6 Super Hits" isn't exclusive to one retailer. And with most of the marketing planned around in-store displays, Hernandez is focusing on physical sales.

With the margins on current music smaller than on deep catalog, budget collections like Sony's "Diez de Coleccion" series, which feature older tracks, can typically offer 10 tracks for about the same price as "6 Super Hits." "We try to stay away from fourth-quarter catalog projects because it's a quarter dominated by big front-line releases and you get lost," says Sony Music Latin senior VP of commercial sales Guillermo Page.

Meanwhile, EMI Mexico is offering "Exitos de a Tostón," a catalog series of five hits for 50 pesos (less than $4). The label's U.S. catalog team is looking into the series for release under a different name.

Digital Music Services Find New Ways To Crunch User Data

Step up: YouTube's Content ID feature helps labels track user-generated content that contains their music, like the viral video hit 'JK Wedding Entrance Dance' (above), which featured Chris Brown's song 'Forever.'

Just about every digital music service is offering artists and labels some insight into how users access their music. This often takes the form of "artist dashboards" that automatically compile traffic statistics and user information for songs, videos and other content.

But other than flashy charts and innovative interfaces, are these metrics programs providing useful information? They are if they're offering more than just a list of the most-streamed songs and the data is generated by a service with a user base large enough to make assumptions about the rest of the market.

"Data, by the pound, doesn't really have any actionable value," says Eric Garland, CEO of the analytics company BigChampagne. "The value is in organizational tools, management of information, analysis, deduction and recommendations."

Jeremy Welt, senior VP of new media at Warner Bros. Records, notes that some digital music services provide only basic data, such as the number of streams generated by a music video. But he adds that labels also want more detailed information on their fans, such as their age and where they live.

"There's a difference between market intelligence and just trending data," Welt says.

Welt points to the recently launched MySpace Music analytics dashboard as an example of the kind of data that labels need. It provides detailed information on how often an artist's music is accessed on MySpace, along with age, gender and location information on the MySpace members interacting with that same content.

Hand in hand with this detail is scale. Given the number of MySpace members and the number of streams that MySpace Music generates, artists and labels can use this data as a window into the minds of fans beyond MySpace and inform far broader marketing and promotional campaigns.

"To take what's happening on MySpace and start to have a connection with the artist development process in a deeper way, you can do a much better job of making smart decisions and combining it with other data sources," Welt says. "You can share that with other departments like radio and sales people, and it becomes more real than just knowing what a few people on the Internet are doing."

For example, Warner Bros. used data collected through the MySpace dashboard in its marketing and promotional strategy for the physical retail release of "The Listening" by the singer/songwriter Lights. It then closed the loop by promoting a Target campaign on the artist's MySpace profile.

YouTube is another example. The video portal's free Insight tool provides running tallies on the number of streams a video gets and the location of users who are streaming it. But new possibilities emerge when this information is coupled with YouTube's Content ID feature, which helps labels track user-generated content that contains music by one of its artists, such as the popular "JK Wedding Entrance Dance" clip that used Chris Brown's song "Forever."

Brown's label, Sony Music Entertainment, was able to compare the demographics of fans who watched the official music video to those who watched the viral hit, taking special note of those who clicked on links to iTunes and Amazon's MP3 store to buy the single. With more than 12 million streams of the wedding video, that's the kind of demographic insight that Sony and Brown's management team normally couldn't have tracked if they had relied solely on user data for the official video.

Of course, not every digital music service offering data analytics commands the audience of MySpace and YouTube. To help supplement the information they have to work with, labels are launching efforts to collect their own data, such as Warner Music Group's decision to standardize all its artist Web sites using a technology platform provided by Cisco (Billboard, Aug. 29), the revamp of EMI.com as a consumer Web site and EMI's launch of its "Your Soundcheck" Web site.

The Vevo music video joint venture between Universal Music Group and Sony Music Entertainment will also be able to collect user data by syndicating its content to multiple services, rather than relying on those disparate services to report details back to them.

A few glaring omissions remain. The largest digital retailer—iTunes—shares little user information with labels beyond the number of tracks sold. And streaming services that link to iTunes for a la carte sales can't provide sales tallies because Apple doesn't share that information with them. These services can tell artists how many times users clicked on an iTunes link, but they don't have any insight into how many of those clicks resulted in a sale.

Apple's stinginess with data partly drives competing digital services to offer free data and analytics programs as a point of differentiation. But the primary goal remains a desire to drive more sales and traffic by empowering artists and labels to help themselves. The effectiveness of this strategy will depend not only on the quality of the data, but how well it's used. ....

Power To The People

Legislation Backing More Low-Power FMs Clears Key Hurdle

In this age of satellite and Internet radio, it's easy to underestimate the importance of small, noncommercial terrestrial radio stations to independent artists.

"There is a real disparity between people who can access the Web and satellite radio and those who can't," musician Erin McKeown says. "There are also a lot of people who listen to the radio in their cars out of habit, and it's easier for them to flip to a new channel than convert to satellite."

McKeown and others who say they owe their careers to small, noncommercial stations are celebrating a recent victory. On Oct. 15, the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee passed the Local Community Radio Act of 2009, which eases requirements on channel separation between low-power and full-power FM stations, paving the way for more LP FMs to appear on the radio dial. The legislation will now go before the House of Representatives for a full floor vote.

LP FMs—which typically have a range of three to seven miles with transmitters of up to 100 watts—have long been an important vehicle for ethnic, religious and local community programming. And LP FMs, especially those affiliated with colleges and universities, have provided vital exposure for niche music genres and independent artists.

Getting the bill out of the House committee represents a huge step forward, according to Michael Bracy, policy director at the Future of Music Coalition.

"We had success getting the legislation through the Senate before, but this is the first time we got it past the House committee," Bracy says. "There was a lot of consensus and not a lot of debate, either, which bodes well. I feel pretty optimistic it will pass the House in the next month and get through the Senate and signed by the end of this session. If this all happens, the licensing window would be late 2010 or early 2011."

Bracy is quick to add that the creation of more LP FMs isn't the solution to the growing homogeneity and move away from local content at commercial stations.

"Low-power FM is about creating opportunities and forcing the big broadcasters to compete," he says. "People have a huge desire for these stations. They want to feel like the radio station they are listening to is part of their community."

Local community support is especially important for indie musicians, who have fought without much success for airplay on commercial stations.

"Obviously, one of the best places for any musician to build their following is on a local level," says Amy Ray of Indigo Girls. "Think about the Athens [Ga.], Seattle or Austin music scenes. The bands from these scenes were served by a bastion of independent resources—radio stations, record stores and indie media. It's all tied together. If any of these elements start to fall out of the picture, they are all affected."

Musician Nicole Atkins, who spoke on a panel about the importance of LP FMs at the Future of Music Coalition's Policy Summit in early October, says she got her start because of such a station. "A small college station in New Jersey was the first place to play my music," she says. "It was a huge boost for me."

Rep. Mike Doyle, D-Pa., who introduced the legislation, imagines a world where even more college stations could break new artists.

"A campus station in my district, WMKP the Roar at Penn State University, Greater Allegheny, is currently webcast only, but it's student-run, [covers] their sports teams and plays a diverse variety of music," he says. "In short, it's a quintessential college station. If my bill passes, that station would be able to serve an area in my urban Pittsburgh-area district that's too often forgotten and doesn't have local voices on the airwaves."

A key goal of supporters of LP FMs is ensuring that a wide range of parties has access to new licenses. Bracy says he envisions a transparent application process with an eye toward collaborations among diverse parties.

"The last thing the FCC wants to do is pit the Catholic Church against the local college and against the local arts organization," he says. "The groups who show that they can work together will have a great chance at getting licenses." ••••

with VLADO MELLER

by MITCHELL PETERS

For the past three decades, Vlado Meller has mastered albums for acts like Miles Davis, Frank Sinatra, Duran Duran, Metallica, Beyoncé and Kanye West. In 2007, the Sony Music veteran joined Universal Music Group as senior mastering engineer at Universal Mastering Studios-East in New York, as part of an effort by the major to open up a new revenue stream by serving outside clients. Meller oversees all of the studios' projects in New York and will help coordinate operations at a new facility that will open at Hanna-Barbera Studios in Hollywood in early 2010. In an interview, he discusses his craft and the state of the mastering business.

1 After Sony Music closed its studio in New York, why did you decide to join Universal?

All my life I worked for the big labels. So it was my first choice to come to Universal, because this is the biggest label. They had mastering already and came to visit the facility. I fell in love with the room. It's a first-class, first-rate studio.

2 What have you been doing to attract new clients to Universal's mastering facilities?

In mastering, it's really longevity that counts. I've done it for over 35 years. I've worked with everyone from [Barbra] Streisand to the Red Hot Chili Peppers and people in between. We cater to everyone.

Mastering is still a very profitable part of the recording business. You've seen studios shutting down left and right since the mid-'80s. But mastering is actually flourishing. You can record an album in any country with any engineer, but eventually you have to master it. And there are very few places that will do it, or do it right. If you look at the records over the last 25 or 30 years, you'll see the same names over and over. It's a repeat business. If you work with a client and they like what you do for them last year or five years ago, they'll come back and work with you again.

3 Has label cost-cutting posed a challenge for your business?

No, because if the client liked results with me four years ago and hit the charts and sold millions of records, and is coming out with a new album, why would they go somewhere else? They'll follow you anywhere you go. If I was in Oshkosh, Wis., with someone else, they'd just go there. And mastering is still one area where labels will pay top dollar. When you talk about recording, everybody has Pro Tools. But when it comes to mastering, it has to be done at a professional studio.

4 Why is mastering such an important element?

Mastering is the last stage in the recording process, where the whole picture comes together. You can record an album with 12 songs, with three done in L.A., one in London, one in Paris and one in Tokyo with three different producers, and then the whole thing has to come on CD and sound like a complete record. So the mastering guy takes over. We're the guys who put it together. It's like a puzzle. We sequence, cross-fade, fade, edit the songs, enhance the sound and make the sound specific to the artist.

5 Do most Universal acts use your facility, or can they choose others?

Artists are allowed to go anywhere they want. This is where the artist will decide which sound they like. What's been happening over the past three or four years is there's always a shootout. They'll send one song to me, one song to L.A. and one song to another mastering person in New York or Nashville. And they'll pick the one they like.

6 With improvements in technology, will amateurs eventually be able to handle mastering?

The technology is there. I still think for probably another five to seven years that it will be a very unique specialty job. But it's a possibility in seven or eight years that people will start doing it at home. But I'm not sure the labels would agree to that. If somebody goes home and masters it and something goes wrong after the CD ships to the stores, there could be a disaster for the label. It's almost a security check at the end. It doesn't matter where you record or who produces it, you'll go to a professional mastering studio to finish the job. That will never die, because very few people would take that responsibility. ••••

ATTORNEY/ AUTHOR

Donald Passman

The author of 'All You Need to Know About the Music Business' updates his classic.

When attorney Donald Passman was teaching a course on the music business at the University of Southern California in the late '80s, he realized that his class notes for that year would make a pretty good outline for a book.

Writing a book was something Passman had always wanted to do. And he felt that there was a need for one about how to make it in the music business. Now, nearly two decades later, Free Press is about to publish the seventh edition of "All You Need to Know About the Music Business" Nov. 17. Its various editions have sold more than 150,000 copies in hardcover, according to his Web site.

In a career that has lasted more than 30 years, Passman has been involved in some of the biggest artist contract negotiations in the industry, including Janet Jackson's switch from A&M to Virgin in 1994 and the 1996 mega-deal that re-signed R.E.M. to Warner Bros. Records. He has also been involved in new-media deals and has represented publishers, record companies, managers, producers and other music industry players. These experiences have helped inform his book, which he revises every three years.

Passman has practiced law with Gang, Tyre, Ramer & Brown for the past 35 years. In his spare time, he writes fiction and has published two mysteries for Warner Books: "The Visionary" and "Mirage."

In an interview with Billboard, Passman talks about some of the recent changes in the music business that will drive demand for new editions of his book.

What changes in the music business did you have to address in the new edition of your book?
The biggest changes are in the digital area and the 360 deals. Now the labels want a piece of nonrecord income. It started with the pretense you would get more for it, like you will get a better deal with a share of the profit and a higher royalty. But all of that has gone away.

The other big change is in digital. We have much more settled how digital rights get treated. Now we are handling things that didn't exist three years ago, like the user-generated content that you find on YouTube and MySpace.

Have 360 deals become the norm at all major labels? And how much pushback are they getting from managers and lawyers?
There is pushback. But unless you have negotiating power, it's just a reality you are going to have to deal with. Again, everything is more difficult nowadays.

What do you think of the digerati belief that artists no longer need labels?
It depends on who you are. If you are a niche artist, you may not need a label. If you are a mainstream artist and you want to break through, no one has done it without a label. That will obviously change in the future but for now you need help, and likely money, to break through all the noise. But the next question becomes, "What's a label?" Look at Irving Azoff, who is building a management infrastructure that is arguably as powerful as some labels.

How is the industry's evolution, particularly the decline in CD sales, affecting smaller artists?
It's harder to get CDs into stores, even for the majors. It's harder now than back in the day when the majors had more muscle.

With digital tracking now possible for all kinds of performances, will performance data measurement shift to a census method, or will sampling continue to determine royalty payouts?
Certainly on terrestrial radio you will continue to see for some time the use of statistical sampling. In digital, the census method is obviously preferable because it's a really accurate accounting.

The book is very specific about CD wholesale costs and even mentions digital downloads. But why doesn't it explain the business model behind subscriptions or interactive streaming?
Because the terms I know about are through confidential deals and I wasn't comfortable giving away those details. Besides, all the deals are different and that space hasn't settled into an industry norm yet.

Are U.S. music publishers right to remain firm on mechanical royalty rates, or should they be more flexible during this transition away from the CD?
In the rest of the world outside the U.S. and Canada, the mechanical rate is a percentage of wholesale. U.S. publishers have always refused to adopt something like that, but I am going to guess they may have to because the profit margins on CDs will generally shrink. But I don't think it will be an easy sell to publishers.

Looking at digital music in terms of a life cycle, where is the music industry right now?
In terms of digital downloads, we are at the adolescent stage to the young 20s. In terms of digital delivery, we are still at the toddler to preteen stage. Sure, you can download music to your cell phone and computer. But eventually there will be some digital device capable, I think, of serving as a very robust cross-platform so you can get music anywhere you want it. That is sort of the ultimate model.

How much longer will the CD survive?
I think it becomes what vinyl is, [limited to] a few specialty stores. Vinyl is the ultimate irony in that turntables now come with USB ports.

The CD is being propped up and is on life support. On the other hand, the CD is still the majority of the business—at some labels it is 70% of volume. Today, the problem isn't the labels. It's the retailers—the floor space is becoming scarce.

Will the industry eventually have a diverse account base with a host of digital service providers selling music? Or will it remain a narrow channel with only mega-sites like iTunes and Amazon dominating the market?
It's going to be much more diverse. There will be a lot of niche players, just like now you have so many cable channels but on those channels you have many people making shows. There are more people in the television industry today making more money than ever before, but it's very diffuse, with people making programs for the cooking channel, the golf channel and the fishing channel.

In terms of where indies and majors stand vis-a-vis the evolution of the industry, are their businesses becoming more closely aligned or is the gulf widening?
The advantages that the majors had in the past are going away. Back then, you could only get into premium retail space with major-label clout. Now the retail stores don't exist and big boxes carried limited titles. So while majors are still important there are so few spaces, [the gulf between the two camps] isn't the issue it used to be.

For example, the majors used to control radio. Now radio is such a narrow channel, with a smaller playlist and playing less music, so [radio] is less of an issue. That has forced labels and artists to find new ways to get their music to the public. ••••

> There will be a lot of niche [digital retail] players, just like now you have so many cable channels but on those channels you have many people making shows . . . for the cooking channel, the golf channel and the fishing channel.

AFTER THREE MULTIPLATINUM RELEASES, ALICIA KEYS HAS THE CLOUT TO MAKE AN ALBUM THAT PUSHES BOUNDARIES. HERE'S HOW SHE FOUND HER 'FREEDOM.'

THE ELEMENTS OF STYLE

BY GAIL MITCHELL

PHOTOGRAPH BY YU TSAI

An unseasonal gust of wind greets Alicia Keys as she steps out of a doorway behind a Beverly Hills hotel on a late-October afternoon. Decked out in a black leather vest and black leggings brightly accented by turquoise suede knee-high boots and a hint of matching eyeliner, the Grammy Award-winning artist gets surprised by the chilly blast as she ducks into a waiting black sport utility vehicle. Commenting on the wind's force, the singer laughs when it's suggested the quick dust-up is a forecast of the whirlwind activity cranking up on behalf of her latest studio album, "The Element of Freedom." >>>

'Empire' Records: ALICIA KEYS and JAY-Z perform 'Empire State of Mind' before game two of the World Series at New York's Yankee Stadium.

On this particular afternoon, the singer/songwriter/producer/musician is being whisked off to CBS Studios to perform her second single, "Try Sleeping With a Broken Heart," for an episode of "Dancing With the Stars" that will air Nov. 17. From there, she hopped on the freeway—in rush hour traffic—to neighboring Long Beach, Calif., where she spoke and closed California first lady Maria Shriver's annual Women's Conference with a rendition of her hit "Superwoman."

Super woman, indeed. That same night Keys boarded a plane back home to New York to prepare for her and Jay-Z's rocking Yankee Stadium performance of "Empire State of Mind" during Game 2 of the World Series. Just two weeks prior, Keys hosted her sixth annual Black Ball at New York's Hammerstein Ballroom, where among the 1,000 guests were Chris Martin, John Mayer and David Bowie. The benefit was for the nonprofit AIDS organization the singer co-founded, Keep a Child Alive, which helps families in Africa and India—and it raised $2.4 million. In between all of this, the indefatigable artist launched a new company, AK Worldwide—prepping a new Web site and jewelry line as part of that endeavor—and began recording more music for her fifth album, "The Element of Freedom."

Originally slated for Dec. 1 (World AIDS Day), the MBK Entertainment/J Records project is now set for a simultaneous worldwide release Dec. 15. "She had a couple of more things in the oven and she wants this to be right," says Carolyn Williams, senior VP of urban marketing for J. "So we gave her the additional time she needed. We also get a second look into the market to build a stronger awareness campaign."

Using more viral marketing this time, J Records alerted fans to the project's lost-love lead single, "Doesn't Mean Anything," through announcements on "Live With Regis and Kelly," MTV, BET and various blogs including PerezHilton.com. "Doesn't" is No. 14 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart. On its heels is the aforementioned "Try Sleeping With a Broken Heart." Keys performed both songs during her "The Element of Freedom: The Lecture & Performance Series" Oct. 21 at New York University's Skirball Center.

Keys' live NYU performance is airing on "Yahoo Pepsi Smash" this week. After a Nov. 5 appearance at the Latin Grammy Awards, upcoming performances by the singer include the American Music Awards (Nov. 22), the "Today" show's outdoor concert series (Nov. 24), the U.K. program "The X Factor" (Nov. 29), the "Christmas at Rockefeller Center" special (airing Dec. 2), a headlining stint at the 2009 Cayman Jazz Festival (Dec. 3-5), "Late Show With David Letterman" (Dec. 14) and "The View" (Dec. 16).

Additional marketing anchors include Keys' free concert on World AIDS Day. Tying in with all of New York radio, the event will also treat Facebook contest winners to a lineup of surprise guests.

BET turns over its "106 & Park" show to a two-hour special, "106 & Keys," Dec. 16. Dedicated to all things Alicia, the broadcast will feature a countdown of her videos, a Q&A and a live performance.

At retail, an exclusive deluxe version of the album will be available at iTunes and Target that includes a DVD featuring exclusive live studio footage and two more bonus tracks. A direct-to-consumer Fan Pak Deluxe (in the $25-$30 range) is also available; it features a standard album in special packaging, two other bonus tracks, audio from last year's Clear Channel "Stripped" program and such add-ons as an autographed T-shirt and—for anyone who pre-orders the Fan Pak—a chance to win one of 88 autographed keys from a Yamaha piano.

When Billboard caught up with Keys again earlier this week, the tireless super woman was finally "taking a small respite" for few days before the promotional juggernaut kicks into gear. "Music is my first love," she says. "But what drives me is the excitement and challenge of trying new things, stretching myself creatively on as many different levels as possible."

Why did you decide to go back into the studio to recor more songs?

It was just a natural progression. While we were mixing th last couple of songs, it felt like we would have been rushing fo no reason to put the finishing touches on songs that deserve one more week or so to do properly. So we gently moved th album back.

You've now released two singles, "Doesn't Mean Any thing" and "Try Sleeping With a Broken Heart." Wha other sonic hints can you share about the new album?

This album is really just about growth and freedom. Sonicall the sound is grand and massive. It feels emotional and vulne able but there's also a kind of freedom in it. I can't quite find better word than freedom to really describe it. Even thoug every song has touches of different textures and sounds, th overall [sense of] freedom is the thing that grounds it. It's de initely the theme of where I am in my life.

Another song example is the track "Love Is Blind." Som people say the piano on it sounds like something from Mar vin Gaye or Bob Marley. We've been using a lot of differen keyboard sounds on this album. This particular song uses th CP 70 keyboard. It looks just like a piano but has a differen tone; more of an electric sound. The song has a darker ton to it and the beats get real heavy. But then the vocals are ver soulful and bluesy.

Who is the producer on that track?

On "Love Is Blind" and "Try," I worked with Jeff Bhasker. H plays beautiful keyboards and piano. We definitely had a grea time playing together.

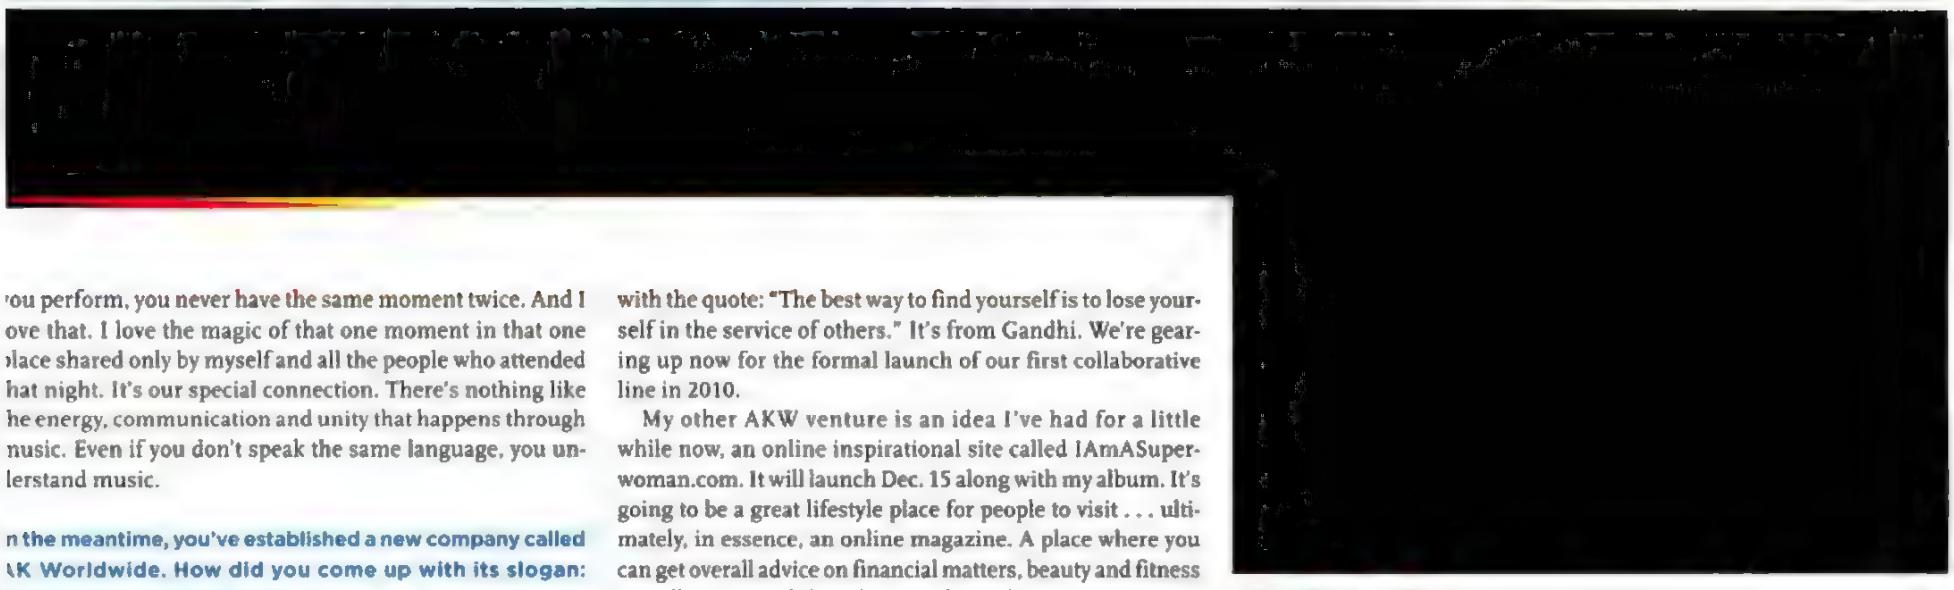
You worked again with longtime collaborator Kerry "Kru cial" Brothers. Who else are you collaborating with o "Freedom"?

The album mainly features me. There are one or two mor songs I'm working on now that it would be really exciting t tell you about. But I'd like to finalize everything before I sta spreading the word.

What triggered this whole freedom feeling?

The process began with "As I Am." I was trying to find the wa to totally be myself and what that meant; figuring out wh choices I wanted to make and not make in order to truly hon myself. That was the beginning of learning how to do that. An now it's culminated into "The Element of Freedom": the abi ity to have nothing holding you back; to be totally brave enoug to be completely yourself in all of its glory.

You worked with Whitney Houston on her current singl "Million Dollar Bill." Are there any other outside projec on your plate now?



Whitney is an artist who inspired me from [the time I was] little girl. Fast-forwarding to now and being able to work wi her to help create this song that took off was fun. We had a l of laughs; it was like being with a long-lost friend. Althoug I'm staying focused now on my project, I definitely see myse working with more artists as time goes by and moving mo into the writer/producer lane. It's another interesting and fu way to express my thoughts, ideas and feelings in another styl

Do you also envision having your own label?

I don't really have a desire to do my own label, to be honest wi you. It's like a pain in the ass [laughs], because you've got deal with so much irrelevant stuff. To do like me times six seven other people, I don't know. I might totally lose it. I ha more of a desire to bring talented people to the forefront a help support them. That's why I see myself doing more of t writer/producer thing. But not necessarily running a label b cause labels are dying. It's a whole different world.

You could feel the fun you were having performing "Em pire State of Mind" with Jay-Z during the World Serie What jazzes you about being onstage?

One of my favorite things is experiencing the spontaneo moment that only happens once. No matter how many tim 'ou perform, you never have the same moment twice. And I ove that. I love the magic of that one moment in that one place shared only by myself and all the people who attended hat night. It's our special connection. There's nothing like he energy, communication and unity that happens through nusic. Even if you don't speak the same language, you unlerstand music.

n the meantime, you've established a new company called AK Worldwide. How did you come up with its slogan: The business of inspiration"?

AKW is the home base for everything I'm involved in presently and want to become involved with in the future. Her AKW team includes managing director Erika Rose and irector of operations DJ Walton.] And its slogan means a ot to me. When I first started in this business, I was really oung and trying to figure out how to balance and make verything work. It wasn't until about 18 months ago that it ll made sense to me. That for me—through my music and he various ventures I've done so far—there's a certain inpiration aspect that goes along with the kind of businesses want to be involved in.

I'd always wondered why I was so attracted to the model of)prah Winfrey, and I realized it's because she's able to do things an incredible way that somehow touches your life and makes ou think about things in a whole new way. There's a lot of inpiration in what she does and gives to the world.

And that's where I feel comfortable, working with what feels atural and authentic. There's enough in the world that focuses n the other side. I'd like to focus on what can lift us up as a eople, help us learn and be open to new things.

esides your philanthropic endeavor, Keep a Child Alive, hat other AKW ventures are being planned?

new partnership I'm involved with is a jewelry line called the arber's Daughters. I met a designer [Gisele Theriault] in Toronto ho makes gorgeous jewelry. I was just so shocked and stunned y her work. Not only is it all done by hand but it's also handngraved with beautiful words and phrases. Being a lyricist, I ve words. And every word written on this jewelry gives you omething to think about, to strive for or lift you up in your jourey. You can feel the words on your skin as if it's your own peronal mantra. [Keys will debut the collection Nov. 23-24 at a ublic event at Collette Blanchard Gallery in New York.]

/hen will you introduce the jewelry line?

/e just did a piece for my Black Ball—beautiful dog tags with the quote: "The best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others." It's from Gandhi. We're gearing up now for the formal launch of our first collaborative line in 2010.

My other AKW venture is an idea I've had for a little while now, an online inspirational site called IAmASuperwoman.com. It will launch Dec. 15 along with my album. It's going to be a great lifestyle place for people to visit . . . ultimately, in essence, an online magazine. A place where you can get overall advice on financial matters, beauty and fitness as well as tips and thoughts on other subjects. I want to engage wonderful women from all walks of life to share their experiences, who can bring specialized knowledge to different areas on the site. It will be a place where people can commune and talk about what's on their minds, what's going on in the world politically and socially.

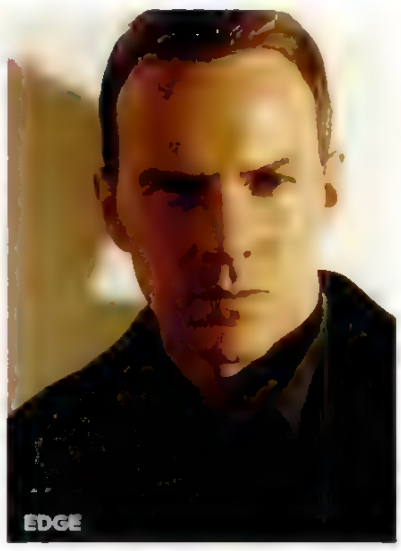
Any movie or TV projects on your horizon?

On the acting side, there is one main role that I very much want to tell you about, but I can't. I know that sucks [laughs]. I can say it's an action film. But if it all comes together, that would really, really be my goal of the year.

Outside of that, my manager/partner Jeff Robinson and I are working on a TV show for NBC that's coming along well. And we're working on a film with Miramax about a female DJ. I personally want to get involved with Broadway. I have some great ideas in terms of developing new pieces as well as helping to bring other strong projects to Broadway.

If you weren't in music, what would you be doing?

I definitely love people and being a part of people's lives. I guess I'd be of service to people in some way. Still on my list of things I want to accomplish is creating charter schools.



Looking back on your career, has the journey been what you thought it would be?

This industry is difficult to break into. Like anything you want to do, you have to love it and be completely focused on it. Nothing can divert or distract you. It's not going to happen quick, it's not going to be real easy. It's not going to be the answer to all your problems or like some Cinderella story. There's no such thing.

I look back and see where I started from and, in my eyes, I'm just starting. Honestly, all of it is one big surprise. The many accomplishments that I've been able to be a part of . . . I feel extremely humble, grateful and excited to continue on that path. It's all one big "wow." ••••

J RECORDS PRESIDENT OF A&R PETER EDGE TALKS KEYS AND COLLABORATION

EDGE

A whole new vibe—that's how J Records president of A&R Peter Edge describes Alicia Keys' coming attraction, "The Element of Freedom." Edge credits the album's "fresh, modern vibe" to Keys' keen understanding of a music essential: collaboration.

"Like all great musicians, Alicia is very open to collaboration, dialoguing about different ideas and directions," Edge says. "She can sit and write a song herself from top to bottom, and this album features several of those in that vein. But this album also features new collaborations that bring new tones to the music, fleshing out a whole new feel. She's very smart and very intuitive about what works for her. She knows how to make music with other people—not just tapping into the producer du jour—as well as herself."

Two of Keys' announced songwriting/production collaborators on "Freedom" are longtime colleague Kerry "Krucial" Brothers and Jeff Bhasker. Brothers co-produced and co-wrote the album's lead single, "Doesn't Mean Anything," with Keys. Another album track by the pair is called "Distance in Time." Bhasker, the music director of Kanye West's live shows and a songwriter/producer on West's "808s & Heartbreak," has contributed three songs thus far: the second single, "Try Sleeping With a Broken Heart" (with drum programming by Plain Pat); "Love Is Blind"; and "Wait Til You See My Smile." The album will also include Keys' version of Jay-Z's "Empire State of Mind," on which she guests.

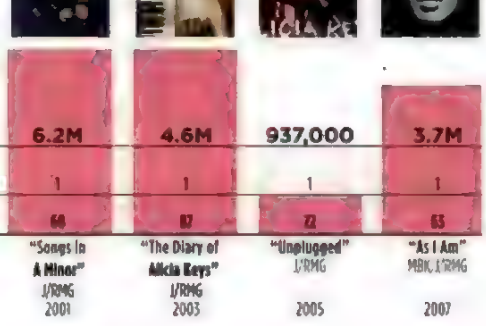
At press time, Edge and Keys remained mum as to who else (including producer Swizz Beatz, Keys' collaborator on Whitney Houston's current single, "Million Dollar Bill") may be collaborating with the singer/songwriter on "Freedom." The album's release date was pushed back to Dec. 15 to give Keys time to add more songs. Edge, who calls the developing collaborations "super exciting," says an announcement will be made within the next week or two.

Edge, who signed Keys to the label and has A&R'd all of her albums, says he's watched her grow from a young girl ("Songs in A Minor") and soul-seeking young lady ("The Diary of Alicia Keys") into a woman flowering into her own ("As I Am"). "It all comes together on 'Element of Freedom,' " he says. "The freedom to express yourself and start thinking about how you want to live your life—that's where she's at. Frankly, so many artists become formulaic. But Alicia continues to re-create herself on each album." —GM

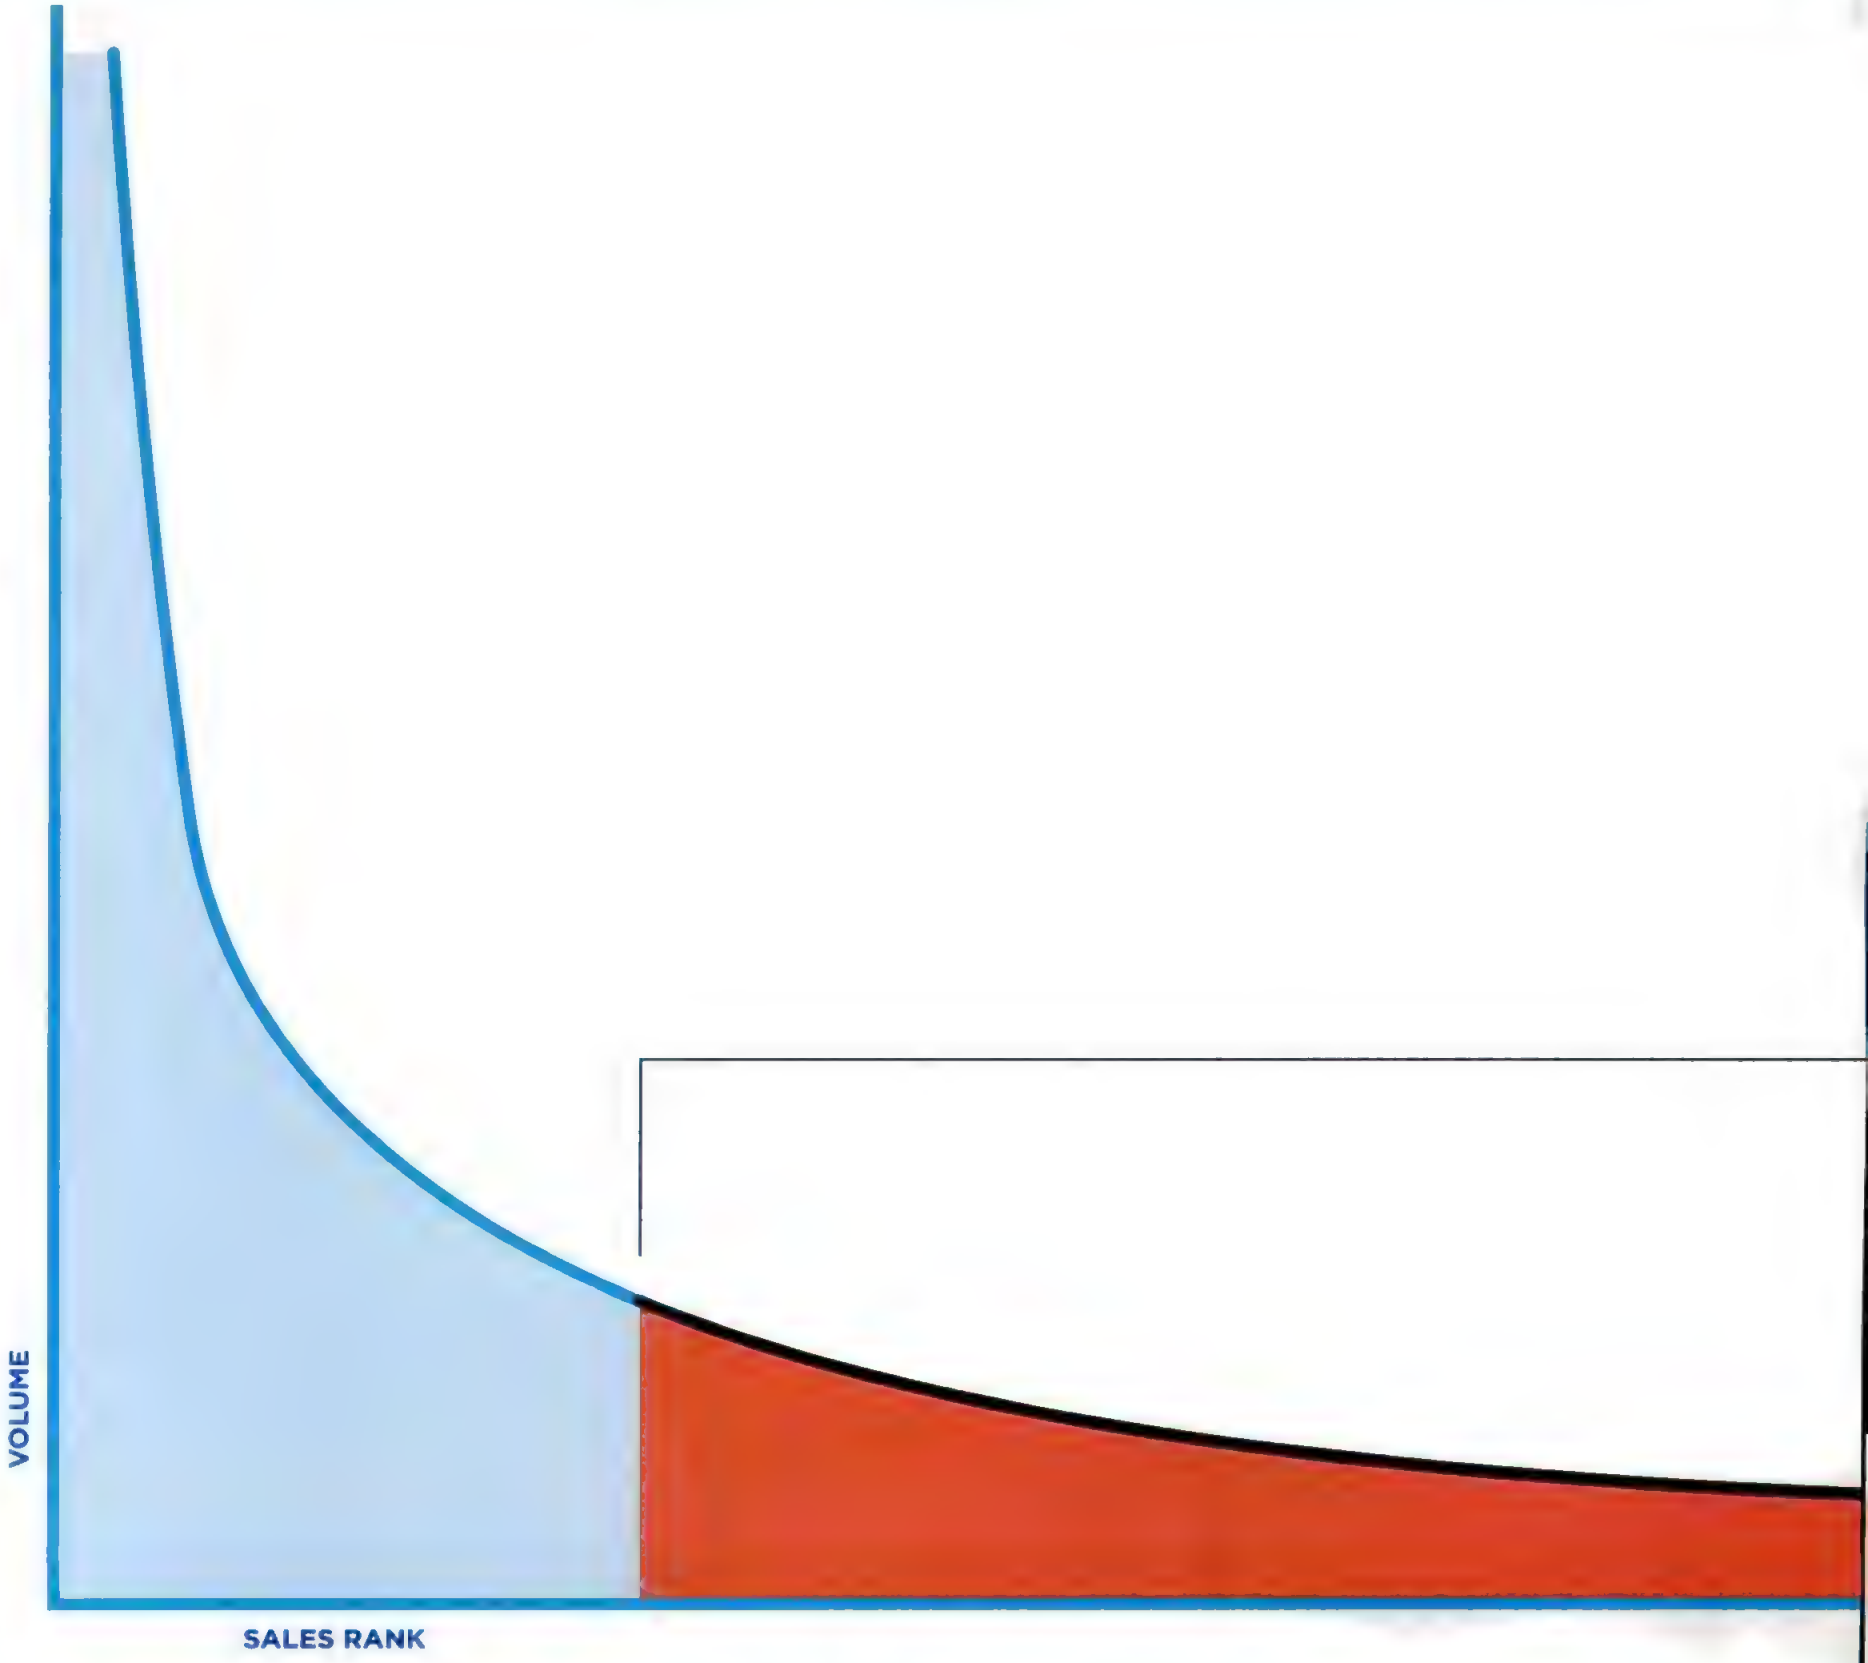
ALICIA KEYS BY THE NUMBERS

Alicia Keys has two of the top 100 best-selling albums in the Nielsen SoundScan era (1991-present) with "Songs in A Minor" (6.2 million) and "The Diary of Alicia Keys" (4.6 million).

Keys and Britney Spears are the only two female artists to have their first four charting albums all debut at No. 1 on the Billboard 200.



Keys has racked up 18 Billboard Hot 100 hits, with nine of those reaching the top 10. She's had three No. 1s: "Fallin'," for six weeks; "My Boo" (with Usher), for six weeks; and "No One," for five weeks.



Keys' chart history is just as impressive on the Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs tally, where she's notched six No. 1s: "Fallin'," "My Boo," "No One," "You Don't Know My Name," "If I Ain't Got You" and "Like You'll Never See Me Again." —Keith Caulfield

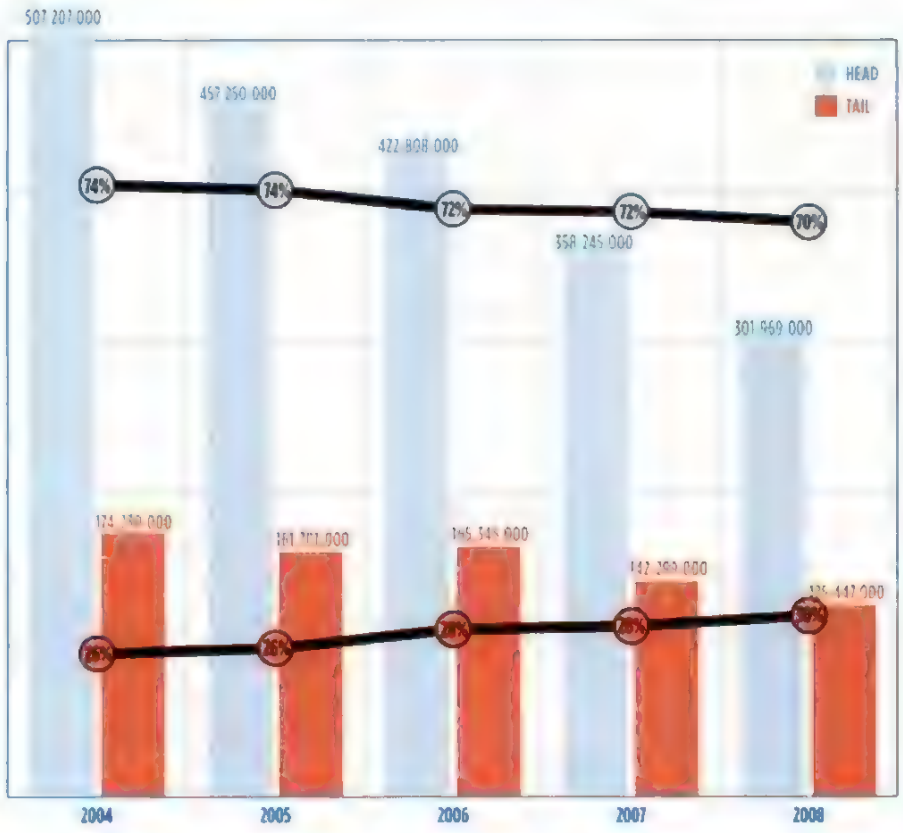
Don't Bury The Blockbuster Yet. The Most Popular Digital Tracks Account For More Sales Every Year

By Glenn Peoples

The Long Tale?

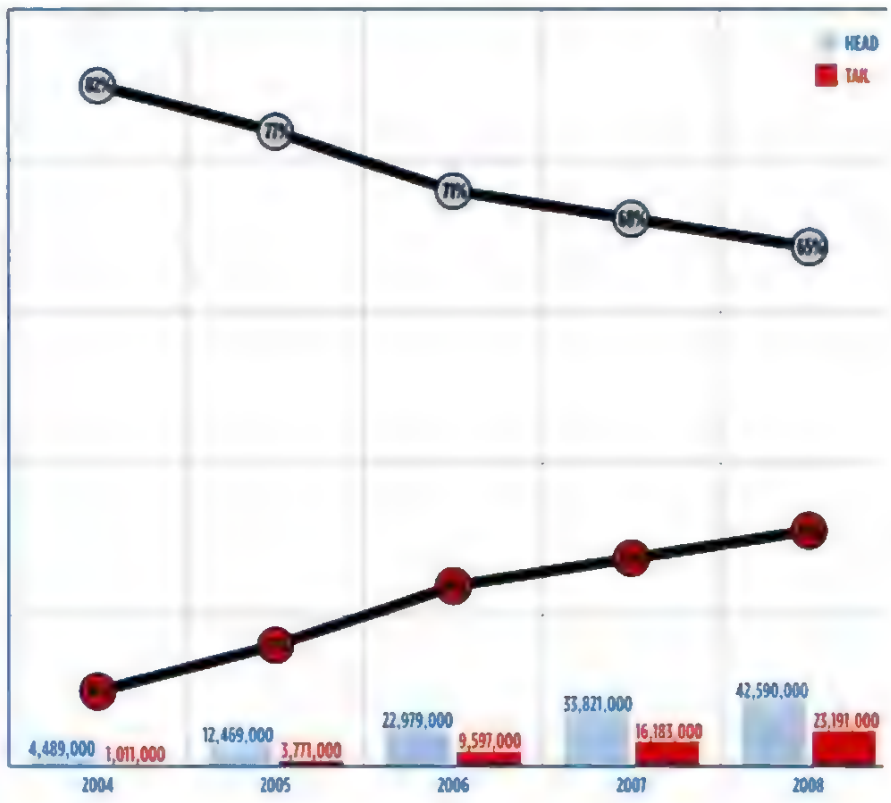
The great hope for digital music was that it would make the recording industry more egalitarian—that up-and-coming bands with pluck and a knack for promotion would be able to get their work to the masses without the backing of record labels. According to "The Long Tail: Why the Future of Business Is Selling Less of More"—a 2006 book by Wired magazine editor in chief Chris Anderson—hits dominated the market mostly because shelf space in stores was limited. Digital retail and online media would exponentially increase the choices available to consumers, who would then use online tools to discover products that appealed to them more than the biggest hits.



Anderson's "Long Tail" idea comes from a sales graph that looks like the letter "L" with a curve instead of a corner. On the left are the hits, the 5,000 best-selling titles that would typically be carried by a national chain; on the right, further down the curve, are less popular titles that sell fewer copies. In the physical world, few stores have space for these niche titles, which don't sell well. But in the digital world, where space hardly matters, Anderson suggested, these titles would collectively account for a far greater percentage of music sales—and of movies, books and other consumer products. The ways we think about popular taste, he writes, "are actually artifacts of poor supply-and-demand matching—a market response to inefficient distribution."

For an industry that coined the term "hit parade," this would amount to nothing short of a revolution.

So far, at least according to Nielsen SoundScan data on U.S. music sales from January 2004 through October 2009, that revolution hasn't arrived—although the demand for albums has changed. Sales of albums, especially digital ones, became significantly less concentrated around hit releases



ALBUM SALES: HEAD VS. TAIL

DIGITAL ALBUMS: HEAD VS. TAIL

Even as sales of the top 5,000 digital albums increase in units (blue bars), they lose market share (blue circles) to those of other albums (in red).

since 2004. But sales of digital tracks—which this year account for 56% of digital sales by track volume—have grown more concentrated in hits during the same time period.

Essentially, hit songs are becoming more important while hit albums are becoming less so.

Although "The Long Tail" discusses the waning prominence of hits, Anderson would prefer to look past the top of the head of hit singles at a larger group of tracks to gauge broad shifts in demand. "In short, this isn't enough data to draw any proper 'Long Tail' conclusions about," he wrote in an e-mail, "since it doesn't use Head and Tail the way the theory does."

Since the publication of "The Long Tail," some studies have confirmed the book's thesis, while others have cast doubt on it. In a 2008 paper, Harvard Business School associate professor Anita Elberse found that hit titles still dominated sales even though some consumers were venturing further down the tail. This year, two researchers at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, Tom F. Tan and Serguei Netessine, examined Netflix user data from 2000 to 2005 and found that new titles are appearing faster than customers can discover them. Perhaps more surprisingly, a study by PRS for Music chief economist Will Page and BigChampagne CEO Eric Garland found that the demand for songs on file-sharing services—which offer users almost unlimited choice—closely mirrors that of purchased tracks. Only 5% of songs accounted for 80% of downloads, resulting in what the authors called a "hit-heavy, skinny-tail distribution."

One thing that hasn't changed since the publication of "The Long Tail" is how hard it is for artists to sell a meaningful amount of music—whether or not they're signed to a label. From 2004 to 2008, the number of new albums released per year has more than doubled. And although digital retail is taking market share from the most popular titles, the sheer number of unpopular albums available means that each of those titles doesn't benefit much from their collective increase in market share. The millions of units that are shifting from a few titles at the head of the tail are migrating to a few hundred thousand at the end of it—each of which doesn't sell much more.

THE POWER OF HIT SONGS

So far digital retail is less about albums than individual songs, which account for 57% of all purchased tracks so far in 2009. And in the last five years, track sales have become increasingly more concentrated, so that hits matter more each year. This trend was first noticed by Elberse, who pointed out that it was happening even as the number of tracks available continues to increase.

The change is significant. From 2004 through October 2009, the most popular tracks have steadily and consistently grabbed market share—and tens of millions in unit sales—from less popular songs. The growth is slight at the top of the chart and more noticeable further down. The top 10 increased to 3.1% from 2.1%. The top 40 increased to 8.3% from 5.9%. And so on. The top 200 tracks—that's just 0.002% of the nearly 9 million currently listed at Amazon—have a market share of 18.7%. In 2004, their share was 14.5%.

At a time when more music is available than ever before, why do so many consumers buy the same few songs? It may be because popular taste tends to reinforce itself, especially in an online world. Or it may be because buyers of single tracks tend to be casual fans who are more inclined to buy songs they hear on the radio and TV.

"One aspect of word-of-mouth online is that it can be an effective discovery technique, driving demand to titles that don't have traditional marketing," Anderson said. "But the other side of it is that it can lead to herd behavior, with 'winner take all' effects. It's possible for both to work at the same time, with some word-of-mouth boosting niche acts, while other word-of-mouth creates bigger hits at the very top of the curve."

Weekly sales figures show just how important hits have become. Since iTunes launched variable pricing in early April, the top 200 tracks have retained their market share even as the number of tracks purchased each week has fallen by about 6%. (Some of this decline may be due to a midyear weakness in digital track sales.) From April to July, the top 200 averaged a 24% share of each week's total track sales. In the same period in 2008, the top 200 averaged just 22.2% of each week's track sales, even though most of the top 200 songs were less expensive.

Although higher prices have depressed sales of hits—in terms of units, not revenue—consumers haven't been spend ing their money on other songs. "The Long Tail" suggests tha consumers will use increasingly sophisticated digital tools t discover, sample and buy music that appeals to them more tha the biggest hits. But in the case of digital tracks, that hasn't hap pened. Consumers who are turned off by a $1.29 price poir for the track they came to buy don't seem to seek out less pop ular alternatives. In other words, many music fans aren't shun ning hits because they don't like them but because the pric rose by 30 cents. And if they don't find the hits they want, the forgo a music purchase altogether.

THE LONG TAIL OF ALBUMS

Overall, album sales don't look that different from five years ag at least in terms of the demand curve. The most significant chang has been the overall decline in album sales: 32% from 2004 t 2008. As everyone in the industry knows, it's tough all over.

As "The Long Tail" predicts, the most popular albums fare the worst, losing market share to less popular titles. From 200 to 2008, sales of the 5,000 albums that make up the head of th demand curve dropped 40.5% while sales of the million-plu albums that make up the tail declined 27.4% And not only di sales of popular albums decline more than those of others, th most popular ones declined the most. Unit sales of the top 1,00 albums of 2008 dropped 41.7% from their 2004 levels. The se ond thousand most popular albums dropped 36%, the thir thousand fell 33.2%, the fourth 31.2% and the fifth 30.9%. Fiv years ago, the top 5,000 albums represented 74.4% of total sale in 2008 they accounted for 70.2%. Some of this comes from th sheer number of albums that now make up the end of the ta

The marketplace for digital albums is also taking shape a cording to the theories in "The Long Tail." At a time when th big-box retailers that now account for so much of the CD ma ket have cut the shelf space they devote to music, the numb of tracks available from online services keeps rising. And di ital retailers make it easier for consumers to sample music ar use various other filters and discovery tools that "The Long Ta predicted would distract them from the hits.

Just as "The Long Tail" indicated, demand for digital albun is moving further down the tail than that for albums overa

In 2008, the top 5,000 albums accounted for 64.7% of digital album sales, as opposed to 70.2% of album sales overall. And the market share of the top 5,000 digital albums is shrinking as niche products take away sales from more popular titles. But the rate of change is slowing—the head lost three percentage points in 2007 and 2008 after shedding more than six points in 2006, which means that the demand curve could settle in something close to its current shape.

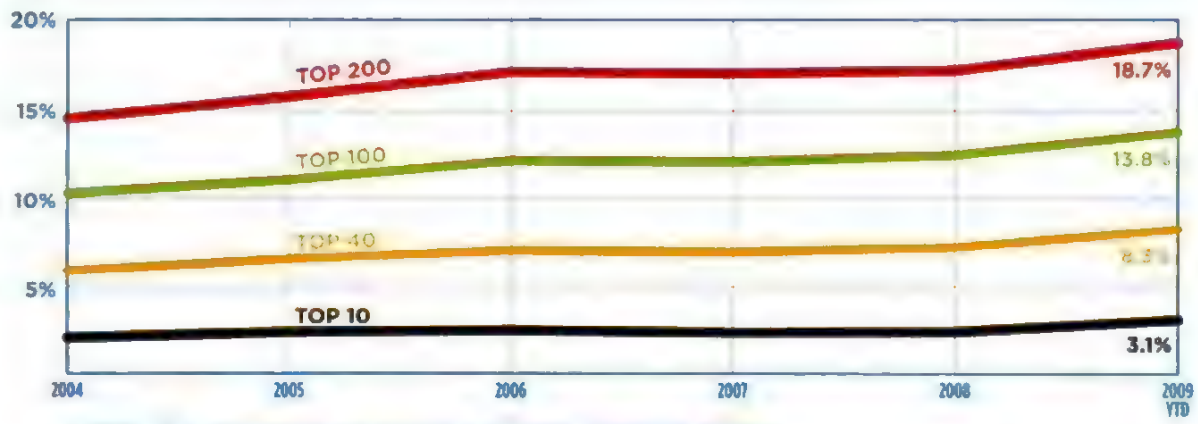
Within the head of the demand curve, which represents a wide range of popularity, albums have been affected very differently. In 2006 and 2007, the most popular 100 albums lost the most market share in absolute terms. The three percentage points of market share they lost represented about 1 million units. In 2008, albums from No. 101 to No. 200 lost the most share in absolute terms. But in relative terms, the albums in the middle of the head fared the worst in terms of losing share. From 2004 to 2008, albums from No. 301 to No. 400 lost the greatest percent of their market share—34%. From 2005 to 2008, Nos. 401-500 suffered the most—22%. From 2006 to 2008, albums as far down as No. 4,000 lost a greater percent of their market share (7%) then the top 100 ranks (5%).

As "The Long Tail" predicted, sales will disperse across a wider range of titles as consumer choice increases. Within the tail of digital albums, the truly obscure albums seem to be pulling sales away from those that are merely unpopular. In 2008, even as the head of the tail shrunk more slowly than in previous years, albums as unpopular as those around No. 8,000 gave up market share to titles that were even less popular.

LIFE IN THE TAIL

Life in the long tail can be difficult for any individual artist. One such album—former Afghan Whigs frontman Greg Dulli's "Live at the Triple Door"—sold 1,400 digital copies in 2008 and ranked at No. 6,736. As "The Long Tail" would have predicted, an album with that sales rank benefitted from the effects of widespread digital distribution. But during the past three years the gain for an album at No. 6,736 was nil: around 75 additional copies.

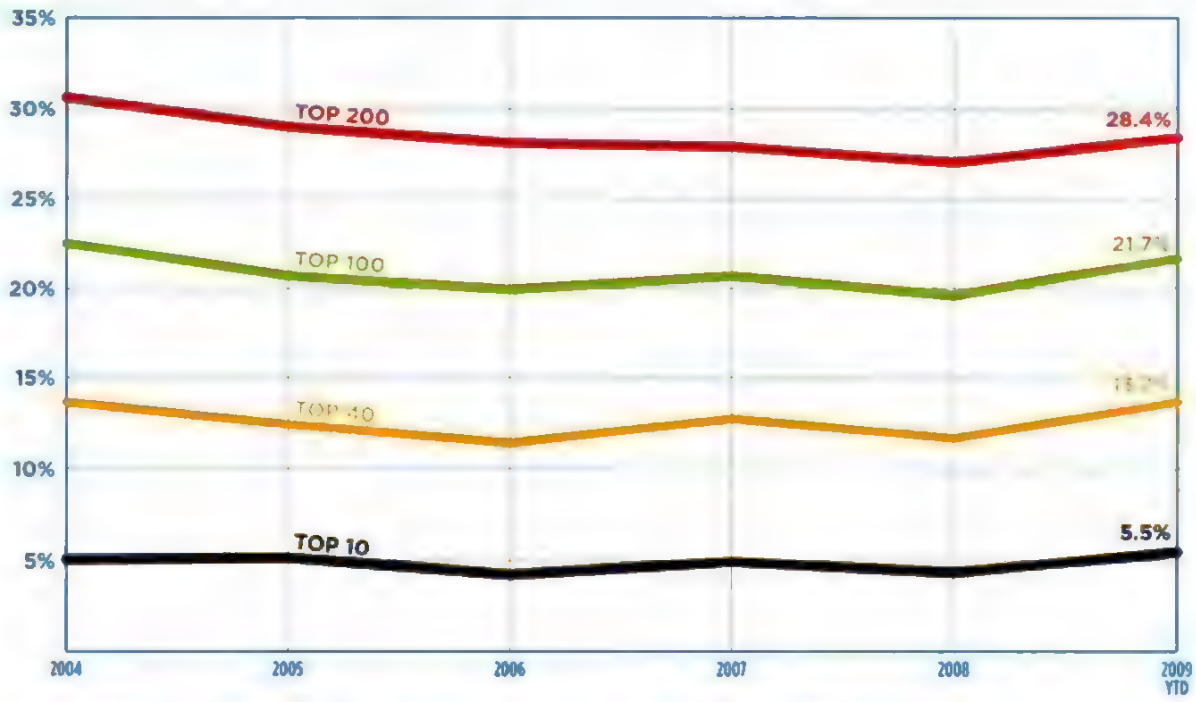
Dulli is the type of artist who might be expected to benefit from the economics of the long tail. Signed to a major label in the early '90s, the Afghan Whigs released some moderately successful albums, and Dulli has enjoyed similar success as a solo artist. But now Dulli and artists like him now face more competition, simply because so many more albums come out each year—"Live at the Triple Door" was one of 50,000 digital-only albums released in 2008. Even if Dulli keeps cracking the top 10,000 albums, his market share is likely to be smaller than what it is today. And market share is important because it influences other revenue streams, such as touring and merchandise sales.



In terms of overall album sales—not just those of digital albums—the greatest changes may be taking place in what might be called the middle class: albums ranked from No. 200 to No. 1,000 in terms of sales. Many of these are catalog titles that benefited from year-round price-and-positioning programs at retailers like Virgin Megastore and fye. Sales of these albums dropped as much as 34% from 2006 through 2008, compared with the 27% decline in overall sales.

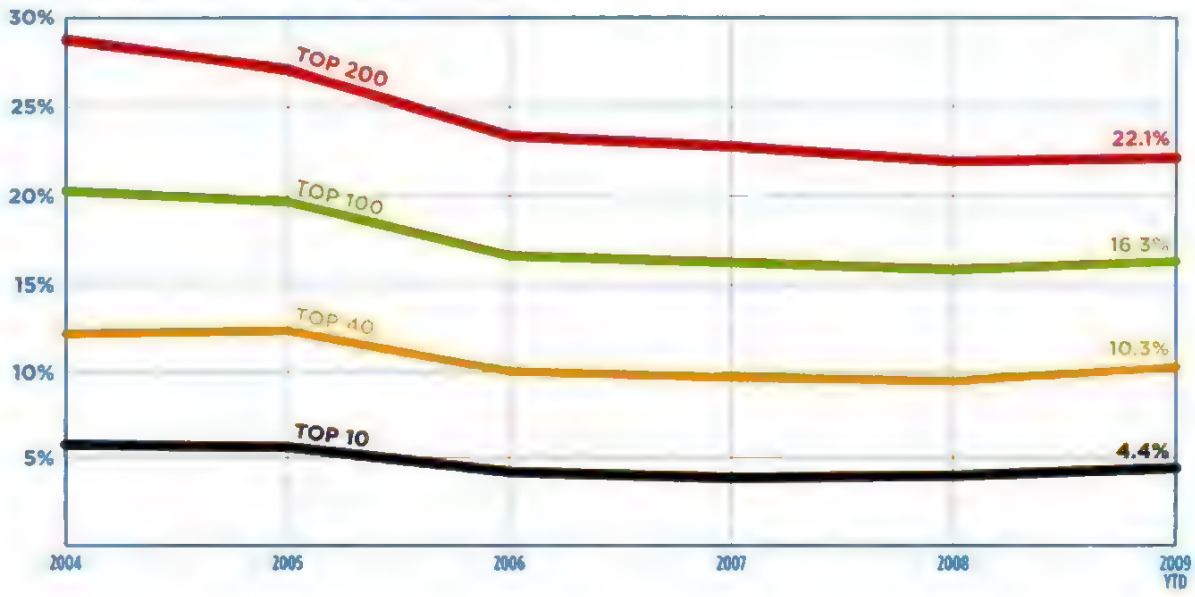
Most likely because so many music stores closed, catalog chestnuts like the Phil Collins collection "Hits" have stayed close to their overall sales rank while selling far fewer units. In 2006, "Hits" sold 116,000 copies, enough to rank at No. 699 among the best-selling albums of the year. By 2008, "Hits" sold 82,000—a 29% drop—but ranked at No. 703.

In the digital world, which relies less on merchandising programs, "Hits" is all but absent: It hasn't cracked the list of the top 10,000 digital albums since 2006. Bargain catalog makes an appealing impulse buy at physical stores, and since many retailers can't carry all of Collins' albums, they focused on a few of its collection. In the digital world, consumers have many more options for Collins' catalog. In addition to "Hits," shoppers can choose from his studio albums like "No Jacket Required" (No. 3,273) and "But Seriously" (No. 9,652) or buy their favorite tracks individually.



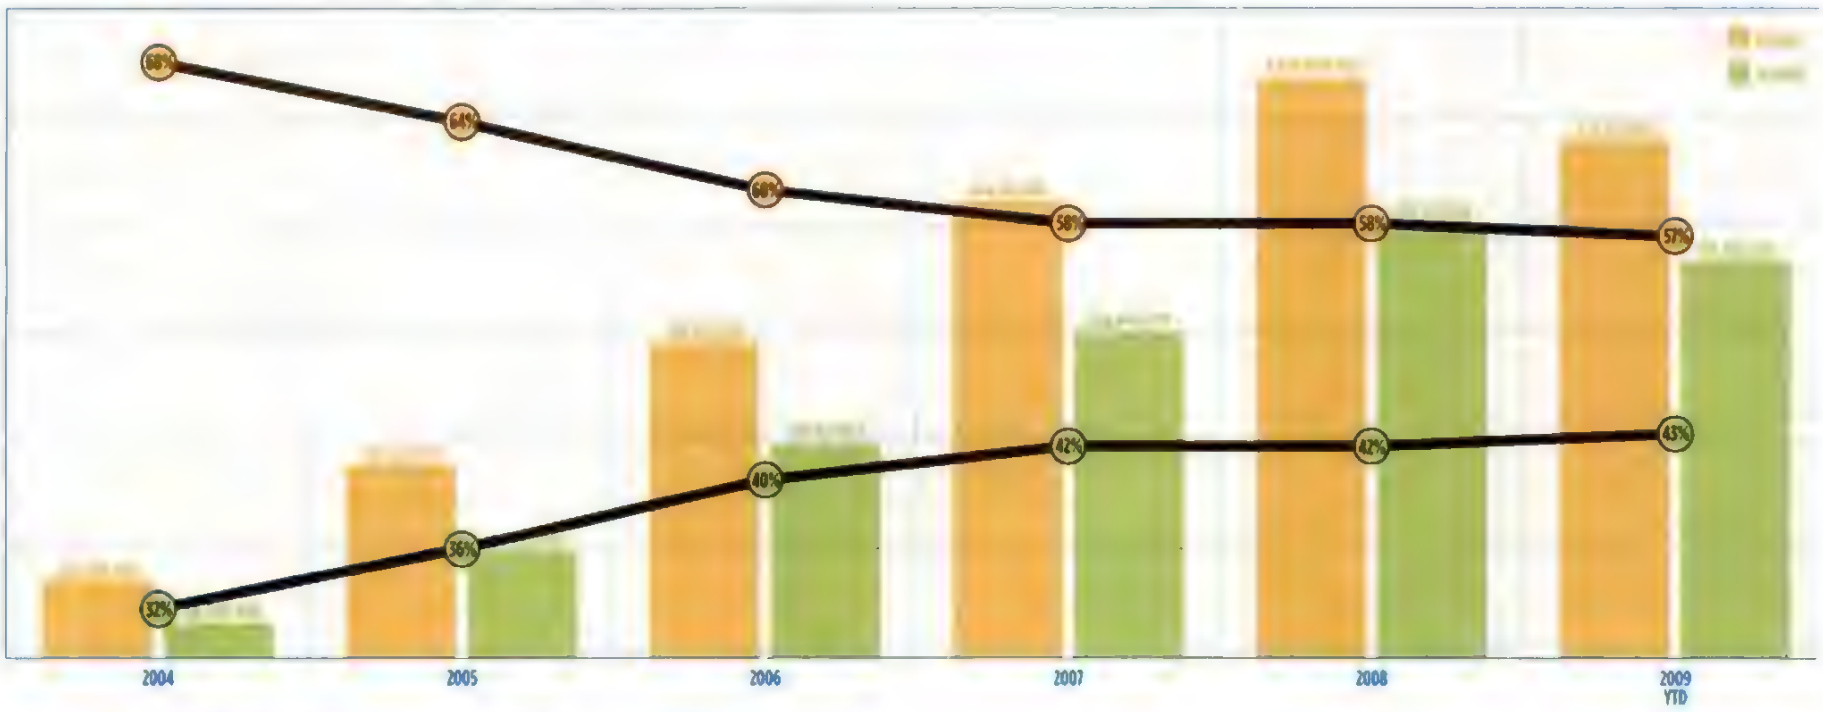
HIT TRACKS ARE GAINING GROUND

In the last half decade, sales of the most popular songs have sold better relative to total track sales. The top 200—out of about 10 million—account for nearly one in five purchases.



HIT ALBUMS HAVE LOST GROUND

In the last half decade, the most popular albums have sold slightly worse relative to total album sales. The market share of the top 200 fell until this year when it has increased so far.



HIT DIGITAL ALBUMS HAVE LOST GROUND

In the last half decade, the most popular digital albums have sold worse relative to total digital album sales. But that trend has slowed in the last three years.

TRACKING SALES OF DIGITAL ALBUMS AND SONGS

In the last half decade, as sales of individual tracks have grown in units (orange bars), they have declined as a percentage of total tracks sold online (orange circles). At the same time, tracks purchased from albums—assumed to contain 12 tracks each—have grown in terms of units (green bars) and as a percentage of tracks sold online (green circles).

ARE THERE RICHES IN NICHES?

So how can music companies adapt to this new world? "The Long Tail" urges businesses to "think niche." Since the future is "selling less of more," it makes sense to make available every product possible. And since niche titles are rarely discounted, Anderson argues, online retailers like Amazon are wise to use recommendation engines to subtly nudge their consumers toward relatively unpopular items.

At the time "The Long Tail" came out, this was smart advice—and it still is for online retailers like Amazon and Netflix, which sell physical goods. For years big-box retailers like Wal-Mart have used popular CDs as loss leaders to drive sales of more expensive, high-margin products. So far, however, pure digital retailers work differently, and iTunes, which typically has the highest prices of any online music store, still has the highest market share. (iTunes also sells more expensive versions of some albums.) And as long as the most popular titles command the highest prices, as they now do on iTunes, retailers would be wise to steer consumers toward them in order to maximize revenue and, presumably, margins.

There is also evidence that a retailer could alienate consumers by steering them toward niche items that don't appeal as much as hits. Anderson wrote in the book that, as listeners stop buying CDs and explore the tail, they are "typically more satisfied with what they find." But Elberse studied user ratings at the Australian DVD rental service Quickflix and found that the more popular titles also received the most favorable ratings. Users who rented obscure titles tended to rate them less favorable than they did hits.

"No matter how I slice and dice the customer base, customers give lower ratings to obscure titles," she wrote in her article for the Harvard Business Review. "There are signs that if you keep pushing people into the tail because the economics for you are really good, that might actually hurt you in the long run." "That may be true for the specific example of the Australian DVD data," Anderson wrote on his blog, "but it is not clear from the paper why she feels able to extrapolate that to all Internet commerce." In their analysis of Netflix user ratings, Wharton's Tan and Netessine also found that consumers tend to be more satisfied by hits than niches.

While it's easy to see how retailers could adapt to the world of "The Long Tail," what about content creators and the companies that fund and market their work? Any label or artist that stopped trying for a hit in order to focus on a niche is almost certainly doing the wrong thing, at least in economic terms. Although niche titles collectively account for a greater percentage of sales, no individual one accrued any meaningful income—and few have received the attention their creators would need to perform or sell merchandise at a time when those revenue streams are becoming more important.

Major labels and independents that are run as serious businesses should continue to focus on how to reach a mass audience—especially on how they can do so using new digital tools and the advertising and sponsorships that are becoming increasingly important in the music businesses.

Indeed, labels have continued to focus on finding hits for a reason: It's almost impossible for them to make real money any other way. (Even if a company or act decides to give away music in order to play live or sell other goods, they still need to reach a significant audience to make that pay off.) Elberse, for one, does n't think content companies should focus on hits any less than they do now. "I don't think they need to go about their job any differently now than they did 10 years ago," she told Billboard. "They will still bet on a few projects more than other projects in their portfolio and hope they will become the winners that pay for the majority of things that don't make a profit." •••

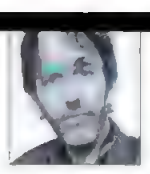
A 'Long' Life

It's Easier Than Ever To Sell Albums—But Harder Than Ever To Stand Out

In the online age, do artists still need labels? The Long Tail seems to imply that they don't, and many digital music executives agree. Just put the music online, they say, and fans will find it.

But how many?



Although popular albums no longer dominate the market like they once did, each digital album toward the end of the tail won't benefit much. That's because the Long Tail phenomenon takes away significant sales from the few albums at the top of the charts but redistributes those sales among many others—each of which doesn't sell enough additional copies to amount to a significant gain.

The same forces that make digital distribution so easy make it harder for each individual album to achieve even modest sales. In a record store, an artist might dominate a niche easily, since the shop might only stock a few thousand other titles. At an online retailer, it's easier to get lost in a crowd of hundreds of thousands.

Consider the numbers: Since 2004, the most popular digital albums have lost market share to less popular titles, according to Nielsen SoundScan. (Since sales of digital albums are rising, these losses are in market share, not units sold.) In 2005, the titles that ranked from No. 101 to No. 200 on Nielsen SoundScan's list of the best-selling albums of the year collectively lost one percentage point of market share—equal to 1,700 units each. Now, that same force also hurts albums that aren't in the top tier of hits: In 2006 the top 2,000 albums lost market share to less popular titles.

To the losers, the decline can be significant: Albums among the 100 best sellers of 2006 collectively lost three percentage points of market share, according to SoundScan, equal to about 10,000 copies each. At the other end of the tail, however, the gains are so modest they barely matter. In 2006, the No. 7,000-ranked title gained about 64 units worth of market share. At No. 10,000, the gain was 53 units.

Album sales are so hard to achieve for niche artists that giving away music may seem like a good idea, and the value of additional fans could outweigh the revenue lost. But it's awareness—not just sales—that's hardest to come by. There's already so much free music available on the Internet that giving it away might not do much to win an artist new fans. —GP

THIS REPUBLIC OF ROCKING

OneRepublic Is Ready To Prove It's Bigger Than 'Apologize'

In the mid-'80s—at the height of the band's popularity—a rock critic called Def Leppard the most faceless band in the world. While almost anyone with a radio could sing one of its hits, members of the band were able to walk around largely unmolested, and in some cases, ignored.

OneRepublic frontman Ryan Tedder is hoping to avoid a similar fate. Ever since "Apologize" topped the Billboard Hot 100 in late 2007, the song has become part of pop culture; even if you don't know it off the top of your head, you've probably heard it while you were buying toilet paper at the drugstore. Tedder's biggest goal for OneRepublic's new album, "Waking Up," which will be released Nov. 17 on Mosley/Interscope, is to define the band beyond one extremely popular single.

"Of course it would have been safer to just make [debut album] 'Dreaming Out Loud,' part two," Tedder says. "But we didn't want to do that. The first album sounds like a band in Los Angeles in a studio. The new one reflects our experience since then—it's colorful and uptempo and exciting, not just a collection of ballads."

Along with touring to set up the new album—OneRepublic opened for Rob Thomas—Interscope is rolling out an extensive campaign to define the band. Four songs from the new album, including the first single, "All the Right Moves," will be released prior to the 17th as part of iTunes' Countdown promotion. Fans who purchase those songs will then have the option of buying the remainder of the album on release day.

"All the Right Moves" is No. 85 on the Hot 100. "The song is building at hot AC and we're getting good early support from top 40," OneRepublic manager Ron Laffitte says. "The band is going to stations in different cities and having sit-downs with program directors."

Laffitte says "All the Right Moves" is the lead single in all territories, save for Germany, where a synch led to a different track gaining traction. "A pretty big film came out over there recently, and the song 'Secrets' was featured in it pretty prominently," he says. "It was a great starting point for us, and the song is now at No. 2 on the German airplay chart."

Steve Sherr of Interscope's marketing team says OneRepublic is focusing its promotional efforts on the local level. "Pretty much every city they go to, they're doing local press and regional TV," he says. Despite the fact that Tedder is adamant that the new album isn't "drive the kids to soccer practice music," Sherr says it's important for the group to play "Good Morning Cleveland," or each city's equivalent program.

"You can reach more people playing local stations than playing Letterman," Sherr says. "But that said, they are going to play the Jimmy Kimmel and Craig Ferguson shows, too."

OneRepublic will also be part of a promotion with the NBC weight loss reality show "The Biggest Loser" and the charity Feeding America. "Ryan was filmed talking about Feeding America and the work they do, and we're going to film the entire band at a food bank," Sherr says. "The segment will then air at the end of an episode of 'The Biggest Loser.' "

In addition to appealing to OneRepublic fans, Laffitte says that he wants to reach out to fans of Tedder's songwriting. "When we do local media, it's a great way for us to tell their story and start conversations," he says. "A lot of stations will play songs such as Beyoncé's 'Halo' during their interviews with OneRepublic and then ask Ryan about writing those songs. It's a natural thing to talk about and it really shows Ryan's range."

Tedder says that, in a perfect world, he would keep his songwriting and producing separate from the band. "I do get the extra exposure, though, which is always good," he says. "I will say that being a writer and a producer is much easier than being an artist." ••••

>>>BON JOVI PLAYING BERLIN WALL

Bon Jovi has added a performance at the 20th-anniversary celebration for the fall of the Berlin Wall in Germany to an already full promotional schedule for its new album, "The Circle." The group is currently the only entertainment at the Nov. 9 ceremony and will perform the album's first single, "We Weren't Born to Follow." Bon Jovi will also perform on NBC's "Today" each Wednesday during November. It will kick off a world tour Feb. 19 in Seattle that is expected to last two years, covering 30 countries.

>>>LADY GAGA BREAKS RECORD

Lady Gaga is the first artist in the 17-year history of Billboard's Pop Songs chart to notch four No. 1s from a debut album, as "Paparazzi" rises 3-1. The singer, recently honored as Billboard's Rising Star, previously led Pop Songs with "Just Dance," "Poker Face" and "LoveGame" from her debut release, "The Fame." The set has sold 1.6 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. It will be rereleased Nov. 23 in expanded form as "The Fame Monster." Since the Pop Songs chart debuted in 1992, only Ace of Base and Avril Lavigne have had three No. 1s from a debut album.

>>>LEWIS MAKES LIVE DEBUT

Leona Lewis played her first full concert on home turf in Hackney, East London, to launch her new album. The U.K. singer, who became a worldwide star after winning "The X Factor" in 2006, grew up in Hackney and chose the borough's famous Hackney Empire theater for her Nov. 2 live debut. "I first performed here when I was 13," she told the audience. "So it seemed fitting to come back and do my first live show here." Lewis is expected to tour next year, although dates haven't yet been announced.

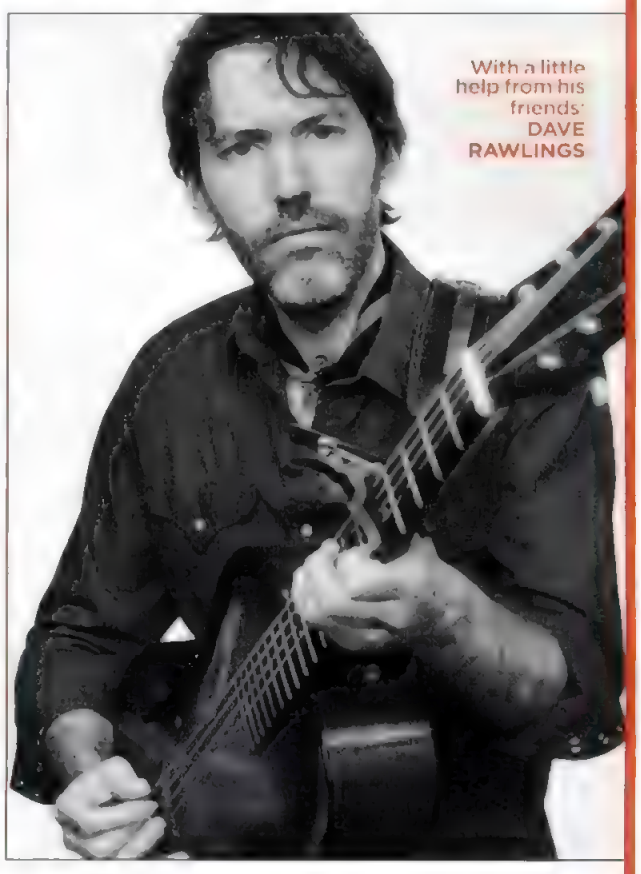
All Eyes On Him

Roots Rock Sideman Dave Rawlings Steps Into The Spotlight

Dave Rawlings has spent the last decade establishing himself as one of the most prominent sidemen in roots music, working in the studio and on the road with the likes of Old Crow Medicine Show, Bright Eyes and his longtime partner Gillian Welch. But this month Rawlings makes a move toward center stage with the release of "A Friend of a Friend," the debut album by the Dave Rawlings Machine, which finds the singer/guitarist leading an all-star ensemble that includes Welch, members of OCMS, Tom Petty keyboardist Benmont Tench and Nate Walcott of Bright Eyes. The nine-track set hits stores Nov. 17 on Welch and Rawlings' Ryko-distributed Acony Records.

Given the authority with which Rawlings sings and strums on "A Friend of a Friend," one might wonder if the desire to make an album with his name on the cover has been burning inside him while he toiled for others. "In a word, no," Rawlings says with a laugh. "If it had, I suppose I would have done it a lot sooner. I just didn't think there was much of a point in putting out something unless it was of a particular level of quality. And maybe I didn't feel like I could achieve that until recently."

According to Welch, "Dave never really liked the sound of his voice as a lead singer until a couple of years ago, when it kind of got fatter and bigger. Now he's got this really great, reedy rock'n'roll tenor."



Indeed, the tunes on "A Friend of a Friend" —which includes seven originals, as well as versions of Ryan Adams' "To Be Young (Is to Be Sad, Is to Be High)" and "Method Acting" by Bright Eyes—swing much harder than those on Welch's more austere recordings. "Not to make a joke on the title of the album, but these songs seemed a lot friendlier," Welch says. That different quality, she adds, required a different approach.

Despite Rawlings' extensive résumé, Acony GM Lori Condon acknowledges that the challenge in selling a record by the Dave Rawlings Machine is getting listeners to recognize the frontman's name. ("He's a little bit of a mystery man," his manager Cliff Burnstein says.) Condon says the label is utilizing Welch's Web site and her e-mail list as a way to bring "A Friend of a Friend" to the attention of those who may not realize they're already fans of Rawlings' work.

At retail, the label is focusing on its relationships with indie stores; on his upcoming tour (which kicks off Nov. 28 in Athens, Ga.) Rawlings is scheduled to make daytime in-store appearances at Nashville's Grimey's and Austin's Waterloo, among others. Press coverage also plays a central role in the label's rollout, says Condon, who mentions an upcoming American Songwriter cover and a four-star review in England's Uncut magazine. "It's pretty difficult to have any certainty about our sales expectations," Condon says, "especially since Gillian's last album came out in 2003. But I'd say that in a year from now, 20,000 records would feel good."

"Talking someone into buying a record that they don't like" is tricky business, Rawlings says, speaking as both artist and label owner. "All you can do is put it out there and let the people who have a good chance of liking it know about it." ....

Scoring a fifth successive U.K. No. 1 album should be a momentous occasion for any band, but in October 2007 the Welsh rock outfit Stereophonics wasn't able to savor the achievement for long.

>>>HOWARD'S END

Veteran South Africa-born/Germany-based schlager singer Howard Carpendale retired from music in 2003—but that didn't last long. Carpendale's latest album, "Stark" (Koch/Universal), released Sept. 25 in Germany, Austria and Switzerland, returns the 63-year-old to the charts that were his regular haunts in the '70s and '80s.

"Stark" is the second new set Carpendale has recorded since shunning retirement in Miami and heading back to Germany in 2007. His November 2007 comeback album, "20 Uhr 10," has sold more than 300,000 copies in Germany, according to his label. Encouraged by that success and a subsequent sellout tour, Carpendale decided the comeback shouldn't be a one-off.

The 12 tracks on "Stark," he says, were informed by personal experience to create "the soundtrack of my life." However, Carpendale swiftly ad that it's not strictly autobi graphical. "I haven't really e perienced [all] the things th I sing about," he says. "Th would be too terrible. But it h to be authentic. The son have to be about things th could have happened to me idn't want to step on V2's oes and V2 staff were going, We're all being fired.' It was shit time."

Koch says "Stark" is closi in on gold status (100,00 shipments); it remains on t Media Control/Gfk chart.

Fast-forward two years and ones says the quartet is "in better place than it's ever een." His mood is fueled by he U.K. release of the act's ew studio album, "Keep alm & Carry On," Nov. 16, ollowing a successful great-st-hits campaign.

Mercury will release "Keep alm" simultaneously in apan and Australasia; the bum will roll out internation-lly in February 2010 but, as t, an American release is yet be confirmed.

The album's mix of contem-lative ballads and fiery rock umbers pushes Jones' deep vocals to the fore. "I didn't want to make a guitar album with a big wall of sound," he says. "I just wanted to do something a lot more reflective and a bit more layered."

The act, which is published by Universal Music Publishing, has sold more than 9 million albums worldwide, says its Los Angeles-based manager Dan Garnett of Nettwerk.

Label upheaval notwithstanding, the OCC says "Pull the Pin" has sold 199,700 copies in the United Kingdom. But that doesn't compare to Stereophonics' 2001 best seller "Just Enough Education to Perform," with 1.8 million copies.

U.S. sales for "Just Enough" stand at 83,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, but Jones says the band has learned to live with its failure to crack America. "We just never had that luck," he says. "It would be good to do, but we don't lie awake at night worrying about it."

The band's first full Mercury release, "Best of Stereophonics: Decade in the Sun," has sold 691,000-plus copies since its November 2008 U.K. release, according to the OCC. "That showed there's a huge market out there that loves the band," says Mercury U.K. product manager Rachael Paley.

Paley notes that the band built up a five-figure SMS database during the "Decade" campaign, adding that Stereophonics' strong online presence was vital to creating anticipation for "Keep Calm." Twitter, Facebook and the band's Web site (Stereophonics.com) have been key to online activity, with a special Facebook application set to go live prior to the album's release.

TV is also playing a big part in the U.K. setup, with appearances on prime-time shows like BBC 1's "National Lottery" (Nov. 11) and specialist programs like BBC 2's "Later With Jools Holland" (Oct. 27 and 30).

But internationally, touring is the heart of the campaign. Garnett says the "Pull the Pin" world tour grossed more than $10 million in ticket sales. He anticipates similar results from the new campaign, including a March 2010 U.K. arena tour (booked by X-Ray Touring) followed by Europe, Asia, Australia and three U.S. trips, booked by Paradigm.

"We're a live band," Jones says. "That's where we get our kicks from a lot of the time—we're all kind of gypsies at heart." ••••

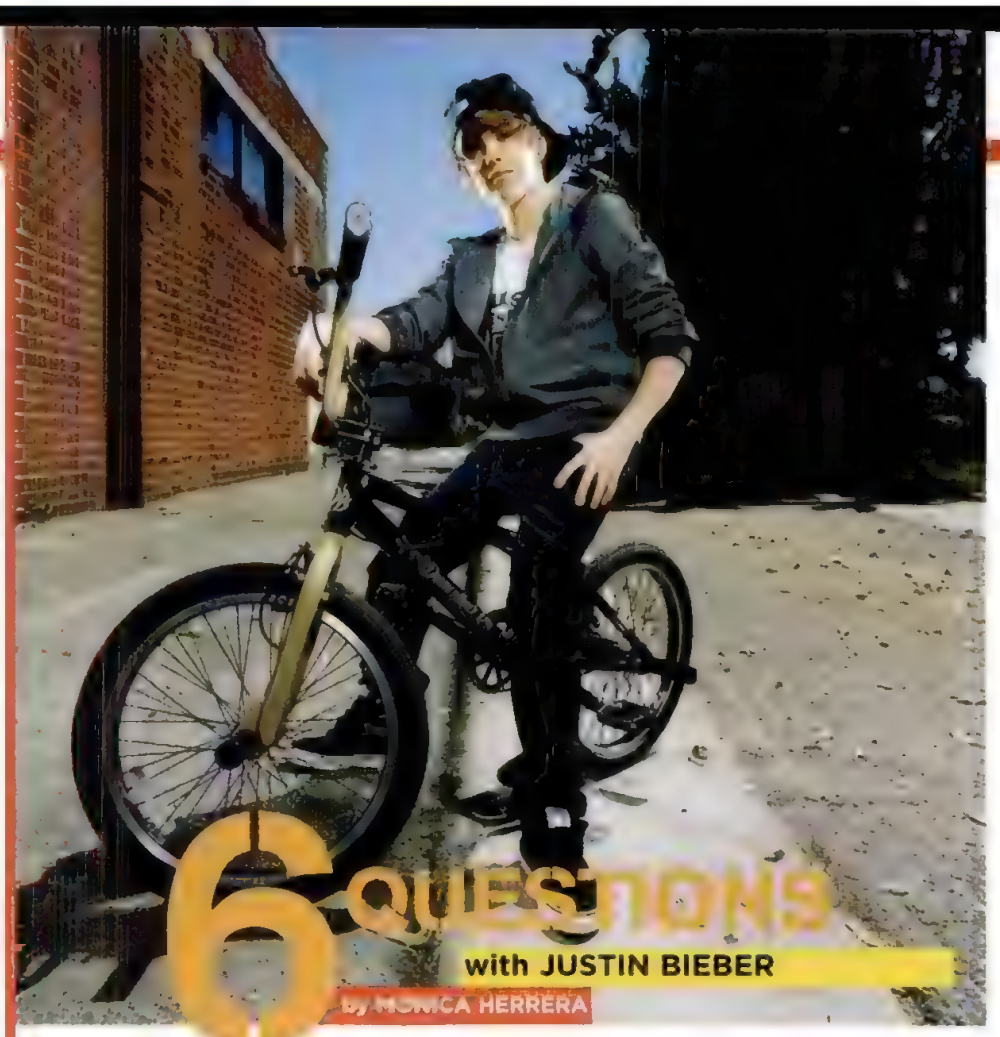
>>>SLOW DAZZLE

There's some irony in the title of Brett Anderson's rapidly recorded third solo album, "Slow Attack," which arrived in the United Kingdom a little more than a year after its predecessor, "Wilderness."



Released Nov. 2 on Anderson's own label BA Songs, the album then rolls out in Europe, Australia and Asia through various licensing deals. A U.S. deal hasn't yet been struck.

"Slow Attack" teams the former Suede singer with sometime Brian Eno and David Holmes collaborator Leo Abrahams, the guitarist/arranger whose work can be heard in movies like "Ocean's 12" and "Code 46."

As producer/co-writer, Abrahams' cinematic experience helped create a lusher sound than the stripped-back "Wilderness," says Anderson's London-based manager Ian Grenfell. " 'Slow Attack' is a more 'produced' —and quite a lot more commercial—album than the last two," he says. "We're starting to receive good radio interest."

The album's setup has included posting acoustic versions of tracks on YouTube. "We've been dropping in a new one every two weeks since early August and getting some very positive comments and high viewing figures," Grenfell says.

Anderson, who recently signed a worldwide publishing deal with Bucks Music, follows up his intimate show Oct. 27 at London's Tabernacle venue with a U.K. and European tour (booked by 13 Artists) starting in late January. —Steve Adams

6 QUESTIONS with JUSTIN BIEBER

by MONICA HERRERA

A year ago, Justin Bieber was a kid from Toronto who had a gift for singing sweet-natured covers of Usher hits, a penchant for playing the drums and a resourceful mother who posted clips of him on YouTube.

Today, Bieber could be the biggest tween heartthrob in music. After signing with Island Records, with the support of his mentor, Usher, the 15-year-old released his debut single, "One Time," in the summer and almost instantly turned his online audience into an army of dedicated fans. "Bieber mania," as his management now calls it, has spread so quickly that NBC says more than 2,000 people attended his Oct. 12 "Today" performance at New York's Rockefeller Plaza—the largest crowd for any artist this year, including Miley Cyrus.

Bieber's second single, "One Less Lonely Girl," recently joined "One Time" on the Billboard Hot 100, and a third, "Love Me," which lifts its hook from the '90s Cardigans' hit "Lovefool," also looks poised to enter the fray. With his debut album, "My World," due Nov. 17, Bieber reflects on his whirlwind of a year, the experience of recording and co-writing his album and how he stays connected with fans.

1 When did you first think you might have a talent for music?

I've always loved music, especially percussion . . . I'm a big fan of Travis Barker. My mom bought me my first drum kit when I was 4 because I was banging on everything around the house, even couches. I picked up the guitar when I was 6 and taught myself to play, but I didn't really start singing until I was 10.

2 How did you start taking it seriously?

I entered a singing competition, and some of my relatives who couldn't make it wanted to see how I did. I posted the videos on YouTube, and then other people started viewing and subscribing. I didn't tell my friends because they didn't really know that I could sing. They knew me for playing sports. I just wanted to be a regular kid, and I knew they wouldn't treat me the same way if I told them.

3 Your first three singles are all about young love. What are the rest of the songs on "My World" like?

Most are about love and stuff that girls can appreciate, but I also co-wrote a song called "Down to Earth." It's a ballad about the feelings I had when my parents split up and how I helped my family get through it. I think a lot of kids have had their parents split up, and they should know that it wasn't because of something they did. I hope people can relate to it.

4 Do you still keep up with your fans on YouTube?

Oh, definitely. I think the Internet is the best way to reach your fans. A couple of years back, artists didn't have that tool, so why not use it now? I'm also on Facebook, and my fans got together and sent me a "Get Well" card on Twitter when I was sick the other day. That was really cool. For now, I'm too worried about getting too close to the fans. I don't share much personal information.

5 What has been the biggest change for you in the past year?

I've gained a lot more fans, and I'm able to travel a lot more. I went to the U.K. for the first time in the summer, and hundreds of girls came out to see me. I wasn't totally surprised because a lot of the people who comment on my YouTube videos are from overseas, but I still had no idea that many people would come.

6 In September, you presented at the MTV Video Music Awards and defended Taylor Swift after Kanye West interrupted her acceptance speech. What was that like?

When I first found out I was going to the VMAs, I was like, "Wow, this is such a big deal—let's go shopping!" After I presented, Taylor Swift thanked me for saying that she deserved to win her award. She said, "Thanks for sticking up for me, lil' bro," and I was like, "Yeah, I've got your back." I wasn't nervous at all, though . . . I never get nervous. I don't think any performer really does. ••••

Save Me, San Francisco Producer: Martin Terefe
Columbia Records
Release Date: Oct. 27
Train frontman Pat Monahan isn't kidding when he promises toward the end of his band's fifth album, "Save Me, San Francisco," that "brick by brick, we'll get back to yesterday." Train's 15-year anniversary puts the group on the nostalgia track, from shrinking its lineup to the three founders—Monahan, guitarist Jimmy Stafford and drummer Scott Underwood—to a title track that celebrates the band's formative days. On "I Got You," Train nods to Bay Area forebears the Doobie Brothers by using the lyrics and melody from the group's "Black Water." But Train travels in a fresh direction during the beatnik buoyancy of the single "Hey, Soul Sister," the playful cadence of "If It's Love" and the ambient build of "Breakfast in Bed." But the trio mostly stays on a familiar track with the lushly crafted melody of string-laden songs like "Parachute," "This Ain't Goodbye" (co-written with Ryan Tedder) and "Words." Monahan's earnest love songs are all sugar and sunshine, right up to the gentle album closer, "Marry Me."—GG

THE BLIND BOYS OF ALABAMA

Duets
Producers: various
Saguaro Road Records
Release Date: Oct. 27
The Blind Boys of Alabama have been in business for generations, but only during this decade has the enduring gospel group achieved broader recognition and acclaim. Much of that has come through the alliances the Blind Boys have made with artists from Ben Harper to Randy Travis, both of whom appear on the group's latest release, "Duets." Only four of the 14 tracks are new, but many—like the lovely "Magnificent Sanctuary Band" (featuring Susan Tedeschi)—may be unfamiliar to Blind Boys fans. That track was culled from an album issued by the featured artist, but the previously unreleased cuts make for some of the most exciting moments. With the help of Toots & the Maytals' Frederick "Toots" Hibbert, the Blind Boys meld nyabinghi reggae and gospel on "Perfect Peace," while a collaboration with bluesman John Hammond on "One Kind Favor" sounds like a doom-filled soundtrack to a midnight bayou tour. Other guest spots include performances by Lou Reed ("Jesus"), Bonnie Raitt ("When the Spell Is Broken") and Jars of Clay ("Nothing but the Blood").—WO

JOHN MAYER

Battle Studies
Producers: John Mayer, Steve Jordan
Aware/Columbia
Release Date: Nov. 17
With all of his recent tweeting and tabloid coverage, it's a wonder John Mayer had time to write new music—much less the best and most adventurous of his four studio albums. Three years after his double-platinum album "Continuum," the new release "Battle Studies" finds Mayer musing about "finding ways to keep the good alive" in romance. He also marches into fresh stylistic terrain by sampling an anthemic U2 ambience on "Heartbreak Warfare," weaving Beatles-esque textures into "All We Ever Do Is Say Goodbye" and creating smooth Southern California pop melodies on "Half of My Heart" (featuring Taylor Swift). Mayer also puts a funky, sinewy spin on Cream's arrangement of Robert Johnson's "Crossroads." And while the artist has raised some eyebrows by asking, "Who says I can't get stoned?" (on the album's first single, "Who Says"), the rest of the collection certainly has the goods to eclipse that overblown controversy.—GG

Fire in My Bones: Raw, Rare & Otherworldly African-American Gospel, 1944-2007
Producer: Mike McGonigal
Tompkins Square
Release Date: Oct. 27
Most modern listeners identify African-American gospel with recordings that mix passion with professionalism, and perhaps a certain amount of studio smarts. But that ignores the pre-war tradition of street-corner preachers, as well as the small groups that sound as though music isn't coming to them but through them. Those traditions cast a shadow for decades, especially in music released by obscure artists on small labels. This three-disc compilation collects 80 recordings of various unpolished styles, in all their haunting glory. Some are peaceful, others pretty, while a few sound downright scary. Much of this music is influenced by, if not made in the shadow of, other styles. One standout is Elder Beck's anti-rock track "Rock and Roll Sermon," a tirade against the pop music scourge of the day—1956. As the liner notes point out, "It rocks harder than most any rock music in its day." This smartly curated collection is essential for anyone interested in gospel and good fun for those who aren't.—RL

ATREYU

Congregation of the Damned Producer: Bob Marlette
Hollywood Records
Release Date: Oct. 27
Atreyu's 2007 release, "Lead Sails Paper Anchor," found the band experimenting with a softer side when the group's Alex Varkatzas ditched his snarling growl for clearer vocals. But Atreyu has resharpened its teeth on its new album, "Congregation of the Damned," which features the return of Varkatzas' deadly scream. But the set still features somber moments, as heard on songs like "Wait for You," "So Wrong" and "Insatiable." Traces of Atreyu's earlier material—like the 2004 "The Curse—can be found on "You Were the King, Now You're Unconscious," "Stop! Before It's Too Late and We've Destroyed It All" and "Bleeding Is a Luxury"—all of which contain back-and-forth vocal exchanges between Varkatzas and drummer Brandon Saller, mixed with chugging guitars, heavy bass and pounding drums —ECJ

Phrazes for the Young
Producers: Jason Lader, Mike Mogis
Cult Records/RCA
Release Date: Nov. 3
Strokes frontman Julian Casablancas steps out with his debut solo album, "Phrazes for the Young," and dynamically weaves '80s techno-pop with psychedelic punk, while also reinventing his usual monochromatic croon. His punk attitude is evident on the opener, "Out of the Blue," on which he sings over upbeat guitar and bright synths, "I know I'm going to hell in a leather jacket/But at least I'll be in another world while you're pissing on my casket." The first single, "11th Dimension," has an old-school dance vibe, complete with electro pulses and enough vocal irony to maintain the cool factor, while "4 Chords of the Apocalypse" is a bluesy number that explodes into a woeful wail. The bleak drums on "Ludlow St." segue into jangly guitars as Casablancas boozily mourns New York's gentrified Lower East Side, proving that he can still orchestrate his own musical hangover.—KP

MORRISSEY

Swords
Producers: various Universal Music
Release Date: Nov. 3
Most of the songs on Morrissey's B-sides collection, "Swords," aren't new, but the set is a varied trove of material recorded since 2004 that wasn't included on the former Smiths frontman's most recent three solo albums. There's a lot of piano and torch here, and plenty of the 18 tracks follow classic Moz formulas, putting wistful lyrics against melodic optimism. But the songs also show the artist's continued creative stretch, from the staggered orchestral layers of "The Never-Played Symphonies" to the ambient "Sweetie-Pie," on which Morrissey's normally careening vocals are more a cantor's eulogy. On "Shame Is the Name" (a B-side to the 2009 single "I'm Throwing My Arms Around Paris") Pretenders frontwoman Chrissie Hynde joins on vocals—a brilliant concept that is sadly underexploited in the mix. From the range of production styles to the bonus disc of live tracks, "Swords" is a welcome catalog addition.—EN

DOLLY PARTON

Dolly

Producers: various

RCA Nashville/Legacy

Release Date: Oct. 27

Dolly Parton has spent her career veering between mountain music tradition and Nash-Vegas glitter—what else would you expect from an artist who built an amusement park near her Appalachian hometown? Her first career-spanning boxed set, "Dolly," captures the highlights of Parton's improbable American journey, with a focus on her early recordings with Porter Wagoner and solo '70s hits like "Coat of Many Colors" and "Jolene." This four-disc set follows Parton through the '80s, when she strayed from her strengths on crossover hits like "9 to 5" and "Islands in the Stream," then returned to her roots on the Ricky Skaggs-produced "White Limozeen." Unfortunately, the set's last songs are from the early '90s. Since then, Parton has gone full circle yet again, recording three critically acclaimed bluegrass albums for Sugar Hill, then abandoning that aesthetic on the appropriately named "Backwoods Barbie." Perhaps that's a story for another set, however, and newcomers and fans alike will find this one remarkably satisfying.—RL

A&M/UMe

Janet Jackson gave her late brother, Michael, two gifts in September. First, the singer paid tribute by performing their "Scream" duet at the MTV Video Music Awards; then she premiered the "Off the Wall"-inspired dance track "Make Me," now a single on her "Number Ones" album due Nov. 17. Her most appealing and high-energy track since the 2001 "All for You," the song thumps aggressively, with a funky guitar lick driving the rhythm. Its nonstop vamp recalls "Don't Stop Til You Get Enough," as Jackson puts a new twist on that classic disco number's chorus. "Don't stop it baby, don't stop til you get it up . . . Ain't nobody else like you/Only you got the moves you do." "Make Me" isn't just Jackson's best dance song in years—it's a hit that would make her brother proud.—MM

Phonogenic/Epic

The Script's last single, "The Man Who Can't Be Moved," failed to ignite U.S. airwaves despite its success in Europe. The group's follow-up, however, should rectify that situation. "Breakeven" is an insightful breakup song about the devastating pain felt when one learns that a former lover has moved on. "They say that things happen for a reason," frontman Danny O'Donoghue sings. "But no wise words gonna stop the bleeding/'Cause she's moved on while I'm still grieving/And when a heart breaks, no, it don't break even." A potential multiformat hit, this well-crafted song is already resonating with hot AC audiences and brewing at modern rock and top 40, positioning the Irish trio for stateside chart success.—AV

On his heartfelt, slow-burning single "Breathe," Ryan Star extends a hand to everyone in need. "Take the world off your shoulders and put it on me," he sings, his voice clenching with veracity. Star catches his own breath during the song's breakdown, singing low and airy over a brooding piano melody. An electric organ kicks in that recalls Bill Withers' "Lean on Me," and while those two songs share the same uplifting theme, Star's is much heavier, its urgency intensified for a different genre and era. The video for "Breathe" cleverly puts the single's lyrics into action, asking potential employers to contact the "real people looking for real jobs" featured in the clip. But visuals are just a bonus to this bright power-rock anthem, which by itself offers plenty to send an inspirational message home.—SG

So Icey/Asylum/Warner Bros.

You know you're approaching hip-hop greatness when your single's hook marks the return of a superstar. "It feels so good to be back," Usher bellows at the top of Gucci Mane's "Spotlight," about a girl the Atlanta rapper wants to bed. As usual, Mane keeps his verses nimble and lighthearted: "Baba, baba, Ok-a/Where you wanna go today/Know she not a prostitute/But if she was I'd have to pay." The rapper also shouts-out recent collaborators Mariah Carey and Trina, comparing his love interest to the singers over a Polow Da Don-produced beat. "The spotlight ain't nothing without you, girl," Usher echoes in the song's infectious chorus, which is soused with extended piano chords, minimal drums and paced hand claps. If there was any doubt that Mane is one of the biggest names in hip-hop this year, consider "Spotlight" a friendly reminder.—MC

Lyric Street

Rascal Flatts' third single from the album "Unstoppable" tackles what might be the group's darkest subject yet: the loss of a friend to suicide. A delicate piano melody anchors the song's beginning and end, providing the sole support for singer Gary LeVox's voice. In between, its instrumentation widens to include somber strings, a steadfast drumbeat and finally, a piercing electric guitar during the emotional climax. LeVox matches the mood with a vocal delivery that fluctuates between fragile and commanding. Co-songwriters Robert Mathes and Allen Shamblin weave an affecting story, using music as a metaphor for life. "Who told you life wasn't worth the fight," LeVox sings. "They were wrong, they lied/And now you're gone and we cried/'Cause it's not like you to walk away in the middle of a song."—MM

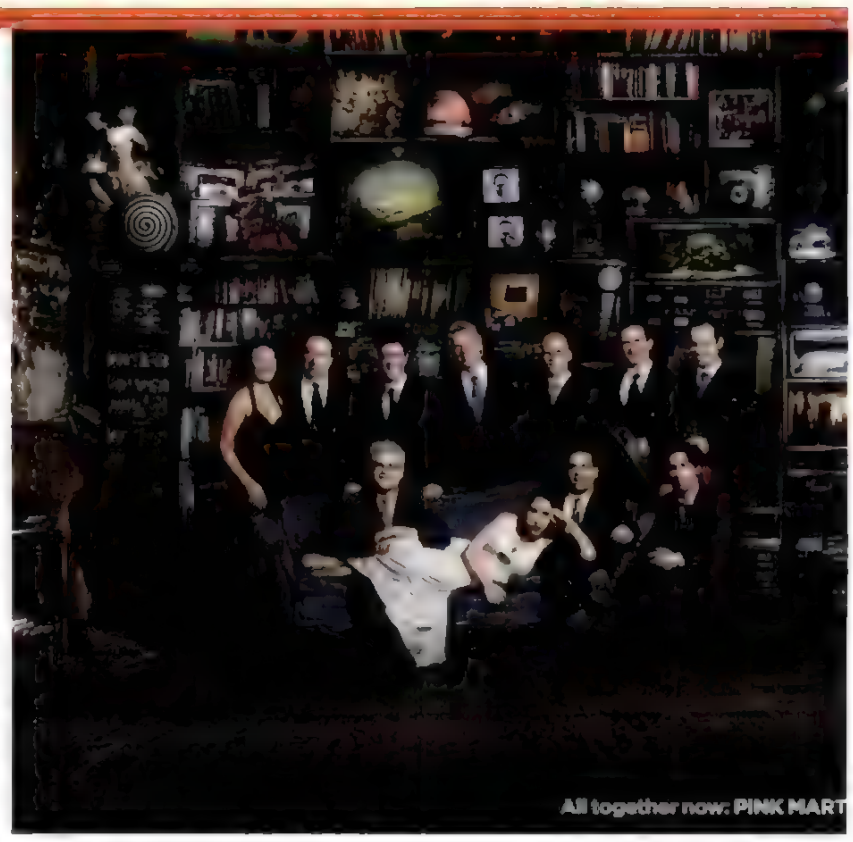
DIY Orchestra Pink Martini Sips Success



For the mini-orchestra Pink Martini, taking the slow-but-steady independent route has paid off throughout its 15-year career. The group's newest release, "Splendor in the Grass," debuts this week at No. 45 on the Billboard 200 and No. 10 on Top Independent Albums with 12,000 copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

With its own label, Heinz Records, and a dedicated team in its hometown of Portland, Ore., the cinematic band of about a dozen musicians has built a following mostly through word-of-mouth—and everyone involved wouldn't have it any other way. "They really are kind of a mom-and-pop family operation where it's just such a hardcore, loyal fan base," manager Sam Feldman says. "It's more bottom up than top down. We don't do all this massive marketing that a lot of artists need and want."

Even without extensive marketing, the group's 2007 album, "Hey Eugene!," debuted at No. 30 on the Billboard 200 and has sold 140,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Since then, Pink Martini has secured licensing deals with companies like Nike and Jeep and has had placements in TV shows like "CSI: NY" and "Weeds."

Heinz label manager Bill Tennant says promotion for "Splendor" has been mostly based on in-store placement, including listening stations at Borders, Barnes & Noble and independent record stores. "The main thing was just to get a good running start and get it as visible as possible right at the beginning leading to the holiday season," Tennant says.

Most important in exposing the band to new audiences, though, are its live shows, which are theatrical and include varieties of jazz, pop and classical styles. "When your band plays for a dozen years and keeps coming back to the same places, every time you would see twice as many people at the next show," Tennant says. For "Splendor," Feldman says the group will tour extensively in Europe in November, New York in December, Australia in January and likely the rest of the United States in the spring and summer.

All together now: PINK MART

Many of Pink Martini's past performances have been done with symphonies and orchestras around the world, which founder/frontman Thomas Lauderdale says was an especially significant component of the group's early success. "We were never the kind of band where you could pile into a van, get stoned and go on the road," he says. "Symphonies had budgets to buy the whole band in and put them up. It made it possible for us to remain independent and that became our tour support."

Pink Martini found much of its success in Europe before the States, and while its multilingual music is often considered European, Lauderdale says he feels it's more like the "ultimate American band."

"America is the most heterogeneously populated country in the world," he says. "And in that sense, this repertoire that we do sort of honors that real diversity, which I think is a more accurate representation of America."

Since the band's start, it has always maintained relationship with individual distributors in the States and globally, a tactic th Feldman says is quite "old school." Tennant adds that while takes work to maintain these relationships, it's worth it to hav control of the group's music. "We're basically licensing to nir or 10 different people," he says. "We love to have that sort of co trol. We love to have the relationships with people in these diffe ent territories who know their territories, who are really committe to what we're doing."

Lauderdale jokes that Pink Martini fans are the last-standin physical-album buyers. "There are really great groups out the and they're dealing with a younger population that doesn't hav that kind of sentimentality or even thought process about wh it means to actually touch something," he says. "But I'm a d nosaur. Hopefully our record-buying public is too." ••

BOO!

With this issue's charts reflecting the week that included Halloween, it's only fitting that we round up the week's biggest "scary" songs and albums. ¶ Michael Jackson doesn't just top the Billboard 200 with "This Is It," he also has the week's biggest-selling creepy digital download with "Thriller." The tune was also the most-played spooky cut across all monitored U.S. radio stations. The classic "Monster Mash" by Bobby "Boris" Pickett & the Crypt-Kickers is in second place on both tallies, while Ray Parker Jr.'s "Ghostbusters" is third. ¶ On the album side, customers were apparently on the hunt for appropriate music to play at Halloween parties or their own haunted houses. The majority of these mostly instrumental and sound-effects sets had their sales come solely from digital download services. —Keith Caulfield

Behind The Music

The Story Behind The Song' Provides Yet More 'Chicken Soup Soul'

usic fans curious about the rigins of their favorite ongs are the intended udience for the latest addi- on to the popular series Chicken Soup for the Soul," The Story Behind the ong." A diverse lineup of ngwriters from Hal David Kanye West share their ersonal stories and tech- iques behind 101 classic ngs in the Nov. 10 Simon Schuster release ($14.95), lited by veteran publicist/ lent manager Jo-Ann Gef- n and "Chicken Soup" co- unders Jack Canfield and ark Victor Hansen.

As Geffen recalls, the proj- t started as "a fluke of good rtune." In Las Vegas attend- g a PR powwow for a hotel ain, Geffen heard a sepa- te presentation by Chicken up for the Soul Publishing president Robert Jacobs.

"I began to think about stories I'd heard or experienced in my career and asked Bob if they took outside ideas," recalls Geffen, who has worked with clients like the Commodores and still operates her own Los Angeles-based publicity firm, JAG Entertainment. "I started a list the same night. People on the plane started chiming in; it was like a scene from a movie."

Casting a wide net in terms of genre and age demographics, "The Story Behind the Song" encompasses pop, R&B, hip-hop, country and rock (including classic, alternative and punk rock) as songwriters reveal the insightful, funny and sometimes sad moments that inspired some of their classic hits.

Among the songwriters sharing their experiences are Paul Anka ("My Way"), Christina Aguilera ("Fighter"), Melissa Etheridge ("Come to My Window"), Ryan Tedder ("Apologize"), Diane Warren ("Because You Loved Me"), Richie Sambora ("Livin' on a Prayer") and Sean Garrett ("Yeah!"). Each story is accompanied by the song's lyrics. Lamont Dozier, a member of Motown's prolific songwriting team Holland-Dozier-Holland, wrote the book's foreword.

Behind the music: CHRISTINA AGUILERA

In his own entry about the Supremes' 1965 hit, "Stop! In the Name of Love," Dozier recalls he was arguing with a screaming girlfriend at a "no-tell motel" he had been visiting with another woman when he asked the girlfriend, "Why don't you stop in the name of love?" The next morning he told Brian Holland he had a great title for the hook Holland was playing. "Ca-ching," Dozier writes. "I definitely heard the cash register."

Submitted before this year's MTV Video Awards incident, West's reflections on "Welcome to Heartbreak" are particularly moving—and ironic. "I don't want to be a superstar shell of myself. I need to know, 'Who's the real person?' I don't want to simply be a caricature of myself."

Dozier and fellow featured songwriters Carol Connors and Stephen Bishop will join Geffen at her first book signing Nov. 12 at the Grove's Barnes & Noble bookstore in L.A. ••••

CHUGGING ALONG

Wandering the streets of scenic Cleveland, Train frontman Patrick Monahan can't help but celebrate his band's No. 17 debut on the Billboard 200 with its new album, "Save Me San Francisco." But, he says, "Our goal isn't to make a record that gets big and then disappears. We want this to be a slow burn and stay on the top 200 for two years."

Monahan credits some of the album's success to its first single, "Hey Soul Sister." The song, which went to radio 10 weeks ago, is No. 4 on the Triple A chart, No. 45 on Rock Songs and No. 14 on the Adult Top 40 tally; it's also No. 53 on the Billboard Hot 100. "It's doing scary good," Monahan says. "We're waiting to take it to pop until January, though, because this time of year is crowded."

Train has spent plenty of time at radio stations on its current tour, which kicked off three weeks ago. "Our biggest goal in setting up the album was rebuilding the fan base and re-establishing relationships because it's been a few years between albums," says Columbia marketing manager Jacquelyn Jablkowski.

Jablkowski adds that the band also worked with Major League Baseball to promote the new album. "They taped a performance and interview with MLB.com, which started running during the World Series," she says. "The timing couldn't be better. MLB has supported Train for a long time, and their music really resonates with the sports audience."

Train has also logged additional success licensing "Hey Soul Sister" to the CBS-TV show "Medium." Jablkowski says there are more licensing deals in the pipeline.

"The album is really a return to our roots as a band," Monahan says. "It's funny to say, but it seems like we're moving forward by going backward."

PLAY IT AGAIN

llowing the recent success of Sean King- on and Jason DeRulo, Iyaz has landed a hit ngle in the emerging genre of "island pop." eplay," a light and catchy tune with a soar- g hook, is No. 13 on this week's Billboard ot 100. It has become the 22-year-old tist's introduction to U.S. audiences, al- ough it wasn't intended to be.

"We weren't looking for a single. 'Replay' as supposed to be one of the album tracks e were banging out," Iyaz says of the J.R. otem-produced track. "But it had a killer elody, and I knew I could put some crazy rmonies on it. It turned out to be one of y best songs."

Iyaz (born Keidran Jones) grew up in the itish Virgin Islands with a father who ured with singing groups and a mother he directed church choirs. While study- g digital recording in college, he recorded e track "Island Girls," which became a dio staple in the Caribbean Islands and ught Kingston's attention.

"Sean hit me up on MySpace, but I didn't elieve it was him. I ignored him for a few ys and even gave him a fake phone num- er," Iyaz says.

Kingston persisted until Iyaz realized it was deed the hit singer/songwriter, and soon e two pop vocalists were talking music and coming fast friends at Kingston's house in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Within weeks of meeting Kingston, Iyaz inked a deal with the Time Is Money/Beluga Heights imprint on Warner Bros. Records. He is working with Rotem, who produced Kingston's hits "Beautiful Girls" and "Take You There," on a debut album that will expand the infectious Caribbean sound Iyaz refers to as island pop.

"If you listen to 'Replay,' it has so elements going on that you don't know will happen next, and that's what we do with this music," he says. "Everything starts off small, but we just hope to move forward with this sound."

gle early next year, with his debut album tentatively set for a second-quarter bow. The singer plans to keep recording and performing at various U.S. events through mid-December as "Replay" continues to grow.

"I've had to record while visiting three states in one day," Iyaz says. "It sounds busy, but busy is the best way to be in the music business."

'This Is' Michael Jackson's Sixth No. 1 Album

Michael Jackson's "This Is It," the companion piece to the musical documentary film of the same name, debuts at No. 1 on the Billboard 200, selling 373,000 copies in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan—the fifth-best sales week for an album in the United States this year. Only the debuts of Eminem's "Relapse" (608,000), U2's "No Line on the Horizon" (484,000), Jay-Z's "The Blueprint 3" (476,000) and Dave Matthews Band's "Big Whiskey and the GrooGrux King" (424,000) have posted better first-week results.

This is Jackson's sixth No. 1 on the tally, and it arrives with his best sales week for an album since "HIStory" started atop the Billboard 200 with 391,000 copies in 1995.

His first topper was "Thriller" in 1983, and he followed it up with "Bad" (1987), "Dangerous" (1991) "HIStory" and "Invincible" (2001).

This year, following his death in June, his 2003 "Number Ones" hits set sailed to No. 1 on the Top Pop Catalog and Top Comprehensive Albums charts. (It wasn't eligible for the Billboard 200, since it is a catalog title.)

The "This Is It" album contains the original studio recordings of Jackson's hits that he performs in the film. It also has one quasi-new song—the from-the-vaults title track. A deluxe version also contains a few demo recordings and a spoken-word poem.

The album isn't a conventional soundtrack. One would have thought it would include the live recordings of Jackson performing his hits as seen in the film, but it does not. Sony Music representatives say this decision was made because there weren't any complete audio recordings of any of the songs heard in the movie.

Having seen the film, there were—at least to my ears—some complete songs suitable for an album. Specifically the gorgeous "I Just Can't Stop Loving You" and "Human Nature." However, a lot of the uptempo dance numbers that involved choreography weren't sung all the way through.

And, considering Jackson's perfectionism and incredible attention to audio detail that is evident in the film, one could suspect that he would have paused at the idea of these performances finding their way onto an album. In my mind, when Jackson was singing in the rehearsals that turned into this movie, he never thought those recordings would wind up on an album.

As the filmmakers have stated, the footage for "This Is It" was never intended for a movie. It was initially meant for Jackson's personal archives—at best, as a bonus feature for a possible DVD release of the planned concerts.

Of course, if the footage that was never supposed to be a film ended up as a film, why couldn't the audio recordings that were never meant to be an album turn into an album? Who knows? Maybe the DVD release of "This Is It" will come with a CD of those audio recordings, remixed and retooled.

For many, this movie represents the closest thing to a Jackson concert they've ever seen. For Americans, it's the nearest they've had to a true Jackson concert in 20 years. Sure, he did the CBS TV reunion special with his brothers in 2001, but after having seen "This Is It" and the TV special, there isn't any comparison. "This Is It" would have been it.

Coming out of the theater after watching the film, I wish I could have taken something home from the experience, much in the same way after attending a conventional concert where I want to buy a T-shirt or a program.

With the film, the closest thing you have to something approximating traditional tour merch is the companion album. The commemorative element of the set and its packaging was probably a great motivator in its sales among fans—especially considering the songs on the album have already sold so well this year in many other configurations.

However, it's too bad the album and its liner notes didn't take it a step further and double as an informative document about the show itself—a tour program, if you will. While it's great that the album booklet for "This Is It" has many photos of Jackson and his dancers and backing band, it's unfortunate that none of them are identified. ••••

1 The song is the label's third Hot 100 No. 1 this decade and its first since Daniel Powter's "Bad Day" in spring 2006. Madonna's "Music" led the list in September 2000.

3 The duo, which performed the song Oct. 29 prior to game two of the World Series, takes dual gainer honors. Downloads increase by 62% (11-5 on Hot Digital Songs) while airplay spikes by 18% (11-7 on Hot 100 Airplay).

33 Finally, a confirmed single from his upcoming "Before I Self Destruct" album. The track, available as part of the album's pre-order on iTunes, sells 48,000 downloads.

75 The song should soar into the top 10 next issue as download sales will factor into its ranking for the first time.

92 The band scores its 12th straight top 10 on Active Rock (11-10), which is its entire chart output. The act's last three top 10s on that list all hit No. 1.

SWIFT'S BONUS TRACK BOUNTY

Taylor Swift becomes the first artist in the history of the Billboard Hot 100 to debut five tracks in the top 30 in a single week as all of the new songs that appear on her "Fearless (Platinum Edition)" reissue debut. "Jump Then Fall" fares the best, opening at No. 10 with 161,000 downloads. Swift now has 11 top 30 Hot 100 debuts in her chart career, which began in 2006. Only the Beatles, with 13 such debuts between 1964 and 1996, have more. Swift's debuts join a re-entry ("Forever and Always" at No. 34, redone for the reissue) and two holdovers from last week (Nos. 14 and 49) to give her eight listings on the chart, the most by a female artist since the list launched in 1958. —Silvio Pietroluong

Lady Gaga becomes the first artist in the 17-year history of the Mainstream Top 40 chart to notch four No. 1s from a debut album, as "Paparazzi" rises 3-1.

The singer previously led with "Just Dance," "Poker Face" and "LoveGame" from her debut release, "The Fame." The album will be rereleased in expanded form as "The Fame Monster" Nov. 23. New single "Bad Romance" bounds 38-25 on Mainstream Top 40.

Since the survey launched in October 1992, two acts prior to Lady Gaga placed three No. 1s from their debut albums: Ace of Base (1993-94) and Avril Lavigne (2002-03). Alanis Morissette also enjoyed a trio of leaders from her first U.S. album, "Jagged Little Pill" (1996).

On Hot Dance Club Songs, "Paparazzi" becomes Lady Gaga's third No. 1. Only "Just Dance" fell short of the summit, peaking at No. 2 in June 2008.

REBA'S 57th TOP 10

Reba McEntire claims her 57th career top 10 on Hot Country Songs as "Consider Me Gone" gains 2.3 million impressions and rises 13-10, extending her record for the most top 10 singles among solo female artists. Dolly Parton is the runner-up, with 55 top 10 songs. "Gone" is McEntire's first top 10 in almost five years on which she didn't share billing with another artist. That hasn't happened since "He Gets That From Me" hit No. 7 in February 2005. On Top Country Albums, Taylor Swift's "Fearless" returns to the summit for a 26th week (see Between the Bullets, page 42)

WEST NETS SEVENTH RAP NO. 1

Kanye West celebrates his seventh chart-topper as a guest on Drake's "Forever" (2-1) and enters a tie with 50 Cent for the most No. 1s on Hot Rap Songs this decade. The track replaces Jay-Z's "Run This Town" (on which West also guests), which reigned for seven weeks. Eminem, who's also featured on "Forever," notches his first No. 1 since 2000, while Drake and another "Forever" guest, Lil Wayne, score their second and fourth chart-toppers, respectively.

On Adult R&B, Whitney Houston notches her 13th top 10 as "Million Dollar Bill" rises 13-9 and enters a four-way tie with Mary J. Blige, Toni Braxton and Mariah Carey for the most top 10s by a woman. The track is her second consecutive top 10 following "I Look to You," which peaked at No. 2 in October.

—Raphael George

Brian McKnight extends his streak to eight consecutive top five debuts on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums (excluding his holiday albums and hits packages) as "Evolution of a Man" lands at No. 3. It's also his sixth top 20 bow on the Billboard 200 (No. 20).

LeToya becomes the only female to score a pair of top 10s for Capitol Records since Billboard began using Nielsen SoundScan data in December 1992. Her debut single "Torn," peaked at No. 2 in 2006.

More than half of the track's 2 million audience spike came from WWPR (Power 105) New York, which ramped up airplay with 31 spins. The station's total contribution is roughly 25% of the song's 7.5 million impressions.

Powered by 20 new stations' airplay and 3.6 million in new listener impressions, Gucci Mane makes the chart's biggest leap and his fastest climb into the top 40.

The lead single from his forthcoming album, propels the New Jersey native to a career debut and the fourth best by a male artist this year.

The Ca'dorma rap duo vaults to its best weekly audience increase (up 36%) after it was announced as the opening act for Chris Brown's 18-city North American tour.

MAXWELL'S 'PRETTY' AMAZING FEAT

Since Billboard published its first all-encompassing R&B singles chart on Oct. 20, 1958, "Pretty Wings" by Maxwell becomes just the fifth song to spend at least 14 weeks at No. 1 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs. It's also the second to do so this year, following Jamie Foxx's "Blame It." Of the five that have done at least 14 weeks at No. 1, Mary J. Blige's "Be Without You" (2006) leads with 15 weeks.

Maxwell also becomes the first male artist to log 50 career weeks at No. 1 on Adult R&B. Currently at the summit for a fifth week with his fourth No. 1 "Bad Habits," the singer trails only Alicia Keys, who has 69 weeks.

With "Hay Ojitos" jumping 4-1 on Regional Mexican Airplay (10.5 million listener impressions, up 38%) in its fourth week on the chart, Intocable is enjoying the fastest rise to No. 1 this year. The group was also responsible for the quickest ascension to the top in 2008 when as "Tu Adios No Mata" debuted at No. 1 in the May 10, 2008, issue.

Alejandro Sanz continues to dominate the Latin charts as "Looking for Paradise" jumps 3-1 on Latin Pop Airplay (9.8 million listener impressions, up 22%) and catapults 10-1 on Tropical Airplay (3.6 million, up 237%). The song's six-week climb to the summit on the former chart ties Shakira's "Loba" for fastest this year.

NAZARIO IS THE LEADING LADY

Legendary Puerto Rican singer Ednita Nazario finds herself atop the charts once again with the release of "Soy." Selling more than 16,000 copies, it's the biggest Latin debut for a female this year, passing Nelly Furtado's "Mi Plan" (13,000). Nazario's sales land her at No. 1 on Top Latin Albums and Top Latin Pop Albums for a third time. Her albums "Por Ti" and "Real" bowed at the summit of both charts in the Dec. 6, 2003, and Dec. 29, 2007, issues, respectively. —Rauly Ramirez

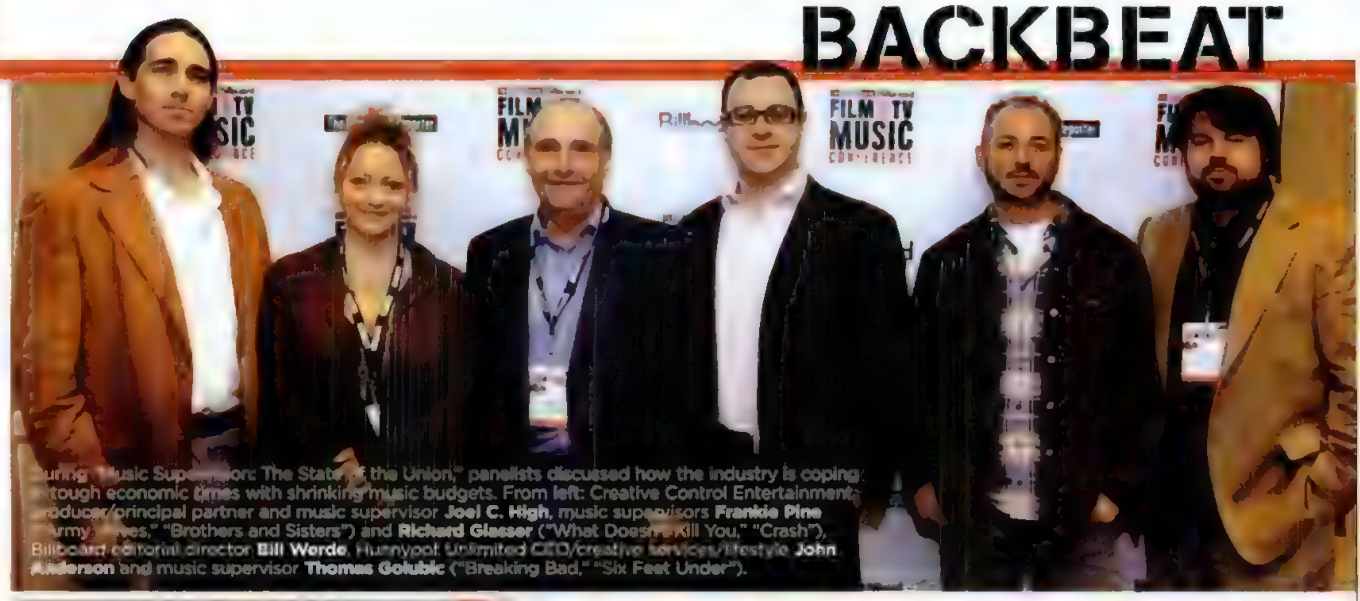
BEGGARS GROUP ASSISTS AIDS FIGHT

The Red Hot Organization, a group dedicated to fighting AIDS through pop culture, marked its 20th anniversary earlier this year by teaming with Beggars Group to release a compilation album featuring some of today's most popular indie-rock acts. "Dark Was the Night," released Feb. 17 on 4AD, is the 20th release in the Red Hot album series. The double-disc set includes exclusive songs (many of which are collaborations) by the Decemberists, Dirty Projectors and David Byrne, Feist and Ben Gibbard, Sufjan Stevens, Grizzly Bear, the National, Arcade Fire, My Morning Jacket, the New Pornographers and Conor Oberst and Gillian Welch.



The National's Aaron and Bryce Dessner produced the album, which has sold 72,000 copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In September, Beggars Group chairman Martin Mills presented a check to the organization for more than $691,000. The amount represents the album's sales for the first half of 2009 and will benefit AIDS organizations worldwide.

"It exceeded our expectations, to be honest," Beggars Group CEO Matt Harmon says. "We had a first-week scan of 13,000 and we were pretty ecstatic about that."

Harmon says that a number of magazines and Web sites offered to discount or waive their advertising fees to help promote the album. "We were able to reach out to a lot of media outlets and a get a lot of support that way for not very much money," he says, noting that artists on the set also chipped in by donating their songs.

In the month prior to the album's release, 4AD set up a special "Dark Was the Night" MySpace page to stream some of the songs. The album was also promoted during a May fund-raising concert at New York's Radio City Music Hall that featured acts on the set, including the National, Feist, Byrne and Bon Iver.

INSIDE TRACK

LOVE RENEWAL MACHINE

The Cult has been spending the year on the road celebrating its 25th anniversary and playing the 1985 "Love" album in its entirety. But vocalist Ian Astbury and guitarist Billy Duffy have also made time for songwriting, with an eye toward making a new album in 2010.

"We did two songwriting sessions," Duffy says, "so we've basically got about eight raw materials. The stuff we did is decent. I'm not one for overpuffing, but we have some good basic ideas for new songs. Me and Ian in a room together can come up with new music. It's just a question of what each of us feels is quality, what we really want to try and say with that new music. We certainly don't want to write 'Fire Woman' again."

Duffy says he and Astbury are planning to convene for more writing in December, and they're starting to consider producers. They're also debating how to release the new music, which will follow "Born Into This," the currently unsigned Cult's 2008 release.

"Ian's a little reluctant to do the full-album format," Duffy says. "He's really excited about viral and portals and all that stuff. He's very happy to make new music—he just wants to do it in an interesting way to him. I'm not bothered as long as it gets out there. I don't care if it comes in a doggy bag. That's why we're a good little team. I'm into it, but I allow him to get really passionate about it."

The Deals Of The Future

360 Contracts Could Point The Way Forward— But The Business Needs To Do More

BY AL BRANCH

As a result of the significant decline in album sales, record labels are exploring new and drastically different business models. The model du jour is called a 360 deal, which allows labels to get income from live performances, merchandise sales and other revenue streams. Although none of my clients are signed to such a deal, this model could help revolutionize the label as we know it by giving it a way to make up for the loss of revenue from sales of recorded music.

Some industry executives believe these deals go too far. But it's also possible they don't go far enough—that ultimately labels will need to evolve into full-service entertainment firms that use music as an entry point—and sometimes a foundation—to an artist's career. On the surface, this might sound like the work of a well-connected manager. But the majority of managers wouldn't be able to provide the same level of finances or staff. In contrast, one of these full-service entertainment firms could work like a well-oiled machine to discover, shape, nurture and position artists into superstars while maximizing their earning potential—and turning a profit at the same time.

It's no secret that labels have plenty of qualified, passionate, influential executives. Many of them can see an artist's potential before others. Most can also develop an artist's sound, voice and image.

So what happens then? These days, once an artist develops a rabid fan base—and fans can't get enough of his sound and style—his management works with agents to find lucrative, fulfilling opportunities. If the system works, they make deals with major companies to sponsor existing products—or make new ones—in a way that makes the artist money and brings in new fans at the same time. Meanwhile, the label is stuck with a recorded-music project that doesn't have the same kind of revenue potential.

This isn't a cry-me-a-river story. If labels had stepped in with their own staff to fund and create these opportunities, they would reap the benefits and get the chance to cash in on their multimillion-dollar investments.

Now more than ever, artists are brands waiting to be discovered and defined. Superstars can go on to sell movies, clothing and just about anything else, often while the label waits at the door. Often, these outside endeavors are funded by other entities that haven't made similar sacrifices in terms of time and dollars.

Superstars can go on to sell movies, clothing and just about anything else, often while the label waits at the door.

The full-service entertainment firm of the future will not only bankroll the ideas of superstars, it will hire qualified executives to maximize the resulting profits. Labels can no longer sit by and operate in uncertainty. They must convince artists and managers that they see them as partners and are willing to put their money where their mouth is.

This is certainly possible. Already, managers and other organizations realize that artists can sell jeans and other consumer products. Recent research from PricewaterhouseCoopers shows that consumers have a propensity to buy products endorsed by musicians more than other celebrities. Labels have always known that, but they haven't been able to take advantage of it. They should focus more on triple-threat artists who are talented at performing (whether that's singing or rapping), creating (whether that's writing or producing) and acting. Labels that sign these types of talents won't have to depend solely on record sales to make a profit. Instead, they can guide the careers of artists in the ways that will matter most to their bottom lines.

Artists are more viable now than ever. Whether it's Facebook, MySpace or Twitter, people can't leave home without their music. From Barbra Streisand and Madonna to Will Smith and Jay-Z, music has always been the gateway to larger careers—a way to create superstars. These days, these talents aren't always evident from album sales. So it's up to labels—or, rather, the full-service entertainment firms of the future they will evolve into—to harness their brands and use them to create new businesses. ...

FILM BY AYALA BEN-YEHUDA

COMING ATTRACTIONS

A New Crop Of Concert Films Is Headed To U.S. Cinemas

After playing a handful of supporting roles in movies like "Because of Winn-Dixie" and "You Don't Mess With the Zohan," Dave Matthews will soon appear on the big screen in a starring role as himself.

Coming to a movie theater near you: the Dave Matthews Band in concert, brought to you by AEG.

The film is part of a new crop of concert movies featuring Kenny Chesney, Creed and other acts that are headed to U.S. cinemas, fueled by demand from theater owners looking to fill seats and artists, managers and promoters seeking new ways to reach fans and monetize their touring business.

AEG's Network Live division has teamed with Action 3D to shoot artist performances at its own festivals, such as All Points West, and some it doesn't promote, like C3's Lollapalooza and Austin City Limits. With 56 performances so far in its library, AEG will release the first of its feature-length movies in theaters Dec. 11-17. The movie compiles performance footage from Dave Matthews Band, Ben Harper & Relentless7 and Gogol Bordello on 300-400 screens.

Network Live president John Rubey—whose division was already shooting 2-D footage for webcasting, mobile video, cinema and on-demand TV release—says the company got onboard with 3-D when Action 3D's technology brought the cost down significantly. Also, "the owners of C3, AEG Live and Goldenvoice bought into the strategy that the only way to scale this is to put it all in one bucket." Until now, 3-D concert films have been "a one-off business."

With the exception of the Hannah Montana/Miley Cyrus "Best of Both Worlds Concert Tour" movie, which grossed $70.6 million worldwide, according to Box Office Mojo, theatrically released 3-D concert movies have yet to show a consistent track record of success. The Jonas Brothers' "3D Concert Experience," released in February, pulled in $23 million worldwide, while last year's "U2 3D" grossed $16.6 million. Both were considered relative box-office disappointments.

AEG/Action 3D's concert films will have more limited runs and lower production costs than those movies, or other major releases like the Rolling Stones' 2008 IMAX film "Shine a Light," which was directed by Martin Scorsese, or the recent Michael Jackson documentary "This Is It."

"We are many, many times smaller than the production budget for U2," Action 3D chairman Jeff Lewis says, noting that the footage comes from single performances—without cobbling together different dates by the artist or adding special effects in the studio.

Fueling demand for more 3-D content are movie studios and theater owners, who are looking to fill seats midweek or during non-summer months when there aren't as many blockbusters to draw people in, Exhibitor Relations analyst Jeff Bock says. Theater owners also want to offset declining attendance by charging a few dollars more per ticket for a 3-D experience that DVDs can't offer.

Sony Worldwide Distribution president Rory Bruer expects high per-screen averages for Chesney's limited-engagement concert movie, "Summer in 3D," filmed during the artist's Sun City Carnival tour. Bruer expects the film to be shown on at least 750 screens in April, with seven or eight showings per screen.

Chesney's is the first artist concert film released by Hot Ticket, the Sony division created to release theater, sports and other live entertainment at multiplexes. In a completely separate initiative, Sony Electronics has launched a "Sony Club Dates" series of high-definition concert films, which debuted in theaters last month with Third Eye Blind. Creed is next in line for the series, with a one-night-only showing on about 50 screens in early December of a recent concert in Houston.

Mike Fidler, senior VP of digital cinema solutions and services for Sony Electronics, said there would be six "Club Dates" by March in the program's initial pilot run. The idea is for each release to also be available for a limited window as an exclusive on-demand product on Sony's Bravia Internet video platform for Blu-ray players and Bravia TVs.

Sweetening the deal for participating artists on concert films is the ability to release them on DVD, as Creed plans to do. Creed manager Paul Geary says the band received a $250,000 advance for "Creed Live" against royalties for sales and licenses associated with DVD sales. "The theater [run] was a by-product of the initial idea" for a concert DVD, Geary says.

"[Creed] can make more in one concert date than they can from producing and releasing a film like this," Geary says, adding, however, that "only a small fraction of the people who will ever hear your music or buy your album will see you live. This is a way to get out there far beyond the reach the band will ever have." ••••

Rank And File

Billboard 200, Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums Charts To Implement Changes

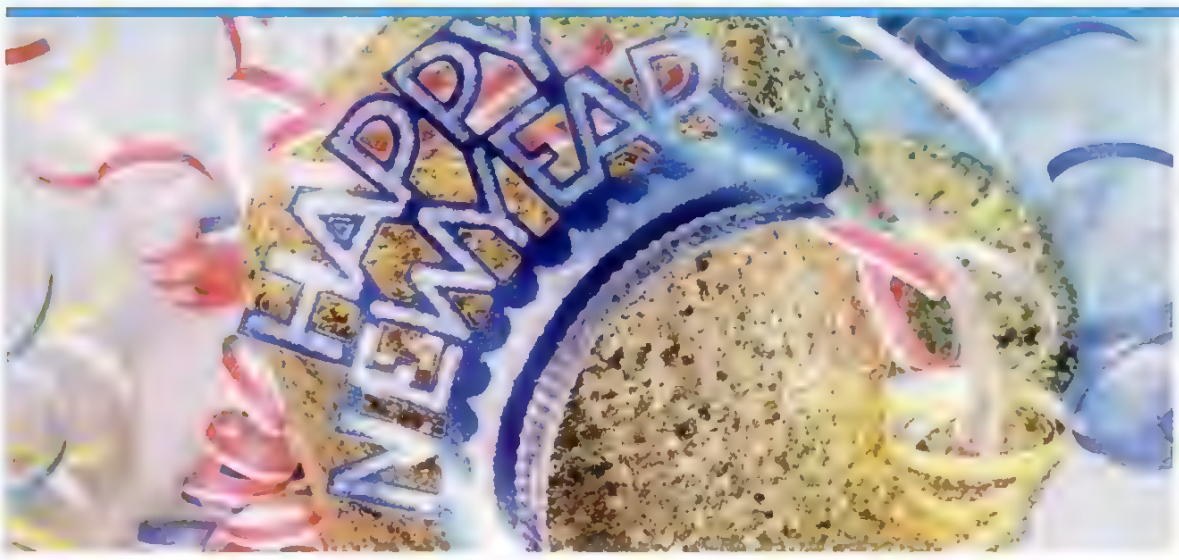
Starting next month, the Billboard 200 will shift from a ranking of the top-selling current albums in the United States to an all-inclusive list of the top-selling albums in the country, regardless of release date. The change will take effect with the 2010 chart year, which starts with the Dec. 5 issue.

The Billboard 200 will be based on Nielsen SoundScan sales data that has been used to compile the Top Comprehensive Albums chart, which has appeared in the magazine periodically this year and has been available on billboard.biz for the past three years.

Replacing the Top Comprehensive Albums chart online will be Top Current Albums, which will use the same current/catalog criteria applied to the Billboard 200 since 1991. Under those criteria, the chart excludes any album that ranks below No. 100 on the chart, is more than 18 months old and doesn't have a current charting single at radio. While those rules will no longer apply to the Billboard 200, they will remain in effect for all other current-based album charts.

"The events of 2009 and the continuing creativity in the repackaging of catalog titles have led us to conclude that the Billboard 200 would be best-served presenting the true best sellers in the country, without any catalog-related rules or stipulations, to our readers, the media and music fans," says Billboard director of charts Silvio Pietroluongo. "The ability of consumers to impulsively purchase new or catalog titles electronically has changed music sales behavior. There is a more immediate cause and effect between artist exposure and album sales in this day and age, and the Billboard 200 should reflect this activity, regardless of an album's release date."

If last week's Billboard 200 had been based on overall sales, catalog titles would have accounted for 11 entries in the top 100 and 35 on the entire chart.



"The comprehensive chart that Billboard is publishing provides an extensive overview of all sales and popular taste and culture," says Nielsen Entertainment president Eric Weinberg. "Nielsen Music and SoundScan remain committed to developing methodologies that accurately reflect our industry and its ongoing changes and evolution to the benefit of our clients."

Billboard is also implementing changes in charts that have been based on sales data from the R&B Core Store Panel, a select group of retailers that specialize in urban music. Effective wit the Dec. 5 issue, the Top R&B/Hip-Hop A bums chart will no longer be based on store pan sales and will instead reflect album sales of current t tles at all U.S. retailers. As a result, the chart will b compiled in the same manner as Billboard's countr Latin and jazz album charts. Other charts that hav been based on R&B Core Store Panel sales—inclu ing Rap Albums, R&B/Hip-Hop Catalog Albums ar R&B/Hip-Hop Singles Sales—will also be ranke based on sales at all retailers.

Lastly, Billboard is launching a new Folk Albun chart that will track SoundScan sales data for ne releases from acts like Joan Baez, Ani DiFranco ar Monsters of Folk, as well as appropriate titles b acoustic-based singer/songwriters like Carly Simo Rosanne Cash and Joshua Radin. The 15-positic chart, which will be managed by Gary Trust, will n periodically in print and appear weekly on billboa .biz and billboard.com.

"The Folk Albums chart will reflect retail activity a niche genre with a rich history," Trust says. "Fo artists are among the most insightful songwrite and intimate storytellers in music and we're prou to offer a chart highlighting their sales achievement

The CMA Awards Honor Taylor Swift Amid Strong Overall Country Sales

Taylor Swift wasn't the only country artist with something to celebrate at the the 43rd annual Country Music Assn. (CMA) Awards.

While Swift went home with the biggest awards haul, including entertainer of the year honors (billboard.biz, Nov. 11), country music executives had good reason to pause and give thanks for what has been a remarkably stable year in terms of sales.

Year to date, country album sales in the United States have totaled 35.2 million, down just 0.9% from the same period last year, according to Nielsen SoundScan. That compares with a 13.2% year-to-date plunge in overall album sales.

Country sales have been buoyed not only by the blockbuster success of Swift's "Fearless," which has sold 4.2 million copies in the States since its November 2008 release, but also by hit albums from the Zac Brown Band, Lady Antebellum, Jason Aldean, Sugarland and other acts.

Weekly sales are now poised to experience their customary post-CMAs boost, although it's highly unlikely the gain will approach the 47% surge that country album sales enjoyed during the week of last year's CMAs, which coincided with the release of "Fearless."

By becoming the CMA's youngest winner of its entertainer of the year award, the 19-year-old Swift further cemented her status as a mainstream media star who transcends her genre.

After serving as an opening act in 2008 for most of her fellow entertainer of the year nominees, Swift stepped up to arena headliner status this year. She raked in nearly $23.7 million in grosses from attendance of 501,999 to 43 shows reported to Billboard Boxscore, and Swift was a finalist for the breakthrough act honor at the 2009 Billboard Touring Awards, along with Kings of Leon, Lil Wayne and winner Il Divo.

Swift's tour, produced by Chesney promoter Louis Messina, president of TMG/AEG Live, sparked a box-office frenzy and robust secondary-market sales, and included sellouts at the Staples Center in Los Angeles and New York's Madison Square Garden. Swift is booked by William Morris Endeavor Entertainment.

The entertainer of the year award was as much a tribute to her success as an album and ticket seller as it was to her pop culture appeal. Her Nov. 7 appearance as host/musical guest on NBC's "Saturday Night Live" brought the show its best ratings of the season. Next year she'll appear in the movie "Valentine's Day," which follows on the heels of her cameo in "Hannah Montana: The Movie."

"I never imagined that the unattainable thing that I'd held in my mind, my imagination, would happen to me at 19," Swift said backstage at the CMAs. "I couldn't be more grateful. But I love a challenge, and right now the challenge is to find the next challenge."

Swift also won album of the year for "Fearless," which she co-produced with Nathan Chapman; female vocalist, bestir three-time winner and the show's co-host Carrie Underwoo and music video of the year for "Love Story."

Meanwhile, Lady Antebellum, the CMA's 2008 new artist the year, won single of the year for "I Run to You." The act als won top vocal group, unseating Rascal Flatts, which had won th award every year since 2003. Lady A's self-titled debut has sol 935,000 copies and "I Run to You" sold 805,000 digital tracks, a cording to SoundScan.

Meanwhile, Hootie & the Blowfish frontman Darius Ruck was named new artist of the year. His album "Learn to Live" h sold 1 million copies, crossing that threshold last week when sold another 13,000, according to SoundScan.

Rucker wasn't the only country convert at the CMAs. Kid Ro performed with Jamey Johnson, Daughtry played with Vince Gi Dave Matthews duetted with Chesney, and ZZ Top's Billy Gi bons appeared with Brooks & Dunn, who were making their la appearance on the show as a duo before splitting in 2010. ..

Punching Tickets

Resellers, Paperless Initiatives Spur Heated Exchanges At Billboard Touring Conference

Few topics in the touring business generate as much impassioned debate as the humble concert ticket.

That much was clear during the sixth annual Billboard Touring Conference Nov. 4-5 at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York, where talk about ticketing threw off plenty of sparks.

Holding back concert tickets from public onsale to feed the secondary market "is a disgusting bottom-feeder practice and I'd like to see it eliminated—it's unacceptable," said Mike Martinovich, manager at Flatiron Management, which manages My Morning Jacket and other acts.

Allen Kovac, president of 10th Street Entertainment, called out Ticketmaster Entertainment for what he said was its practice of withholding data on ticket buyers from management. David Butler, North American president of Ticketmaster, responded from the audience by clarifying the ownership of the consumer data collected.

"It's the venue and promoters' data," Butler said. "And if they agree to share that with you, we will give it to you."

Paperless ticketing, which is primarily aimed at squashing the secondary market, was another hot-button topic.

"The issue we have right now is that [paperless ticketing] takes away fans' rights and it essentially allows the primary ticketing company to become monopolists when it comes to the secondary," said Chris Tsakalakis, CEO of the leading reseller StubHub. "It eliminates competition . . . Consumers are losing rights with paperless ticketing."

.biz For 24/7 touring news and analysis, see billboard.biz/touring.

Similarly, Don Vaccaro, CEO of the secondary vendor TicketNetwork, warned that paperless ticketing will hurt sales because it limits consumer options.

"There is a cost to having your patrons have tickets nontransferable," Vaccaro said. "They're going to buy less; the sales process is going to slow down because they know they can't resell them."

But primary-ticketing stakeholders shot back that paperless ticketing has been a success. "Fan response has been fantastic and logistical issues did not exist," Butler said, noting that Ticketmaster has moved some 600,000 paperless tickets so far this year on tours by AC/DC, Miley Cyrus and Bruce Springsteen.

The Verizon Arena in North Little Rock, Ark., has been offering paperless ticketing at all its events, amounting to about 3,500-4,000 premium seats per show, said the venue's GM Michael Marion, who quipped that "the only people who have complained are the scalpers."

If paperless ticketing inconveniences consumers as much as resellers claim, "where is the outrage right now?" asked Nathan Hubbard, president of Live Nation Ticketing. "The right to resell a ticket is about 105 on their list of issues with the live experience. We have much deeper and important issues to solve."

Whose ticket is it anyway? Butler said the artists, the venues and the promoters own the tickets. "Content is king and it's their ticket," he contended.

But Vaccaro countered that "once you spend $200 on a ticket, you deserve the right to do what you want with it."

Other takeaways from the touring conference:

Ticket discounting: While marking down tickets may have been necessary during the past year because of the economy, it's a strategy that could eventually hurt artists if it continues, according to Brian Manning, an agent at Creative Artists Agency.

"While the discounts help bring people in, it's harmful for us to train audiences to wait to buy instead of rewarding them when tickets hit the market," Manning said. "I would like to be more proactive in trying to force those discounts early on and rewarding those fans who come to the table in the beginning."

Digital marketing: C3 Presents partner Charles Attal recalled he had told the touring conference last year that 75% of C3's marketing budget was spent on digital campaigns. Now, he said, his company spends close to 90% of its festival marketing on digital initiatives. Meanwhile, Rob Beckham, an agent with William Morr Endeavor Entertainment, sa that digital marketing doesn play nearly as big a role marketing performances country acts.

"I don't know how ma people who go to a Georg Strait show are looking at di ital advertising online," Bec ham said. "They're listening the radio station and they looking at the arts section their newspapers."

Label downsizing: As labe downsize, artist manage agreed on the importan of bringing more servic in-house.

"There used to be a lot mo people at the labels, a lot mo depth in the departments, a the labels were able to mo the meter more regularly said Bill Botwin, CEO of R Light Management, whic manages Dave Matthew Band and Tim McGra among others. "It's importa for management to take a le in the process. You need know about strategic partne you need to be talking to the regularly." ..

Under New Ownership, Iconic Label Fania Seeks To Exploit Its Catalog

Following the acquisition of all its assets by Codigo Group last May, Fania, the most recognizable name in tropical music, is poised for a new phase. The label has revamped its logo, launched a renewed marketing push and remastered and digitized much of its catalog.

Codigo, an entertainment company funded by New York-based private equity group Signo Equity, also purchased the Westside Latino catalog last December, which includes the Discuba, Seeco and United Artists Latino catalogs.

All told, the combined assets of Codigo Music, which will now fall under the iconic Fania brand, include more than 20,000 tracks, 2,400 albums and 200 artists, including Tito Puente, Celia Cruz, Beny More, Ruben Blades, Willie Colon, Johnny Pacheco, Ray Barreto and Hector Lavoe, with recordings going back to the '40s.

It's a jaw-dropping span of music history now under one roof. It's one thing that Fania is emblematic of salsa, but quite another to walk into Codigo's Miami offices and physically see the database of recordings, meticulously archived by format, from LPs to master CDs. The walls of Codigo's offices tell the story in countless album covers—the records that generations grew up on—featuring an enormous, breathtaking supply of artistry that appears impossible to ever emulate again.

"Our objective is to leverage the brand and build long-term relationships with Fania fans," Codigo Group chief marketing officer Michael Rucker says, noting that Fania's Facebook page has nearly 20,000 fans. "With a brand like Fania, people want everything: CDs, books, pictures, vinyl, everything. And we want to be the ones to facilitate that."

One of the first things Rucker did after Codigo acquired Fania was to archive the label's assets and store all the master tapes at a New Jersey facility owned by Iron Mountain, the information management services company.

The first Fania set to come out under Codigo is "Tito Rodriguez: A Man and His Music—El Inolvidable," due Nov. 17. The two-CD, 30-track set is part of the "A Man and His Music" series launched last year under Fania's previous owner. The sets boast 32-page liner notes and typically retail for $18.99-$19.99—an acceptable price for Fania fans, who tend to buy the expensive sets instead of the single CD releases.

Last year, Fania sold 400,000 albums, including boxed sets, according to Rucker. The label does put out mid-line price sets, including "Historia de la Salsa" and "Greatest Hits," both single 10-track CDs without liner notes that retail for $12.99. But the top-selling series is "A Man," with the bulk of sales coming from retailers like Best Buy and one-stops like Distribuidora Nacional in Puerto Rico as opposed to mass merchants.

Early this month, Fania launched its Web site, Fania.com, from which it directly sells physical and digital music, with close to 500 albums available digitally. Fania's physical and digital distributor, the Orchard, is also handling worldwide synchs and licensing, a major source of revenue for the company.

Next month, Fania.com will begin selling other merchandise, for which Rucker has "big, big expectations." He adds that there are also plans for vinyl sales in the near future.

For 2010, Rucker says, "our goal is to evaluate success not by 'Did we sell 400,000 copies?' but by 'Did we reach 200,000 fans?' " he says. "Our goal is to evaluate success by how much our consumer spends a month as opposed to 'Did we sell them one CD?' " ••••

Perched on the throne: EL TRONO DE MEXICO

Princely Sums

El Trono De Mexico Reigns Under The Radar

El Trono de Mexico's latest studio album has spent the last 52 weeks on Billboard's regional Mexican albums chart, with only two of those weeks outside the top 10. The band has sold 350,000 copies of its albums in two years, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and a collection of previously released and brand-new songs, "Hasta Mi Final," debuts at No. 2 on the chart this week.

But don't feel too bad if you have never heard of the group. The sextet has had consistently strong sales amid a relatively low profile north of the border. (The group made its first extended trip to the United States this year to promote its album and play shows.)

With a somewhat delicate, low-fi sound, El Trono de Mexico also differs from its counterparts in the duranguense genre in that its members hail not from Chicago or Durango, Mexico, but from Santo Tomas de los Plátanos, outside Mexico City.

The band put out its first album five years ago on its manager Arturo Torres Flores' indie label Skalona Records, breaking big enough to eventually secure distribution licenses with Universal Mexico. In the States, Universal Latino initially distributed the band's albums before the regional Mexican market leader, Univision Music Group, was acquired by Universal. El Trono's current album, "Almas Gemelas," was its first as a direct signing to Fonovisa/Universal and has sold 100,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. (El Trono also released some of its earlier recordings independently in the States through DBC last year.)

In years past, El Trono had sold well at U.S. mom-and-pop stores, but by the time Fonovisa secured priority positioning for "Almas Gemelas" at major retailers, there was still pent-up demand, Fonovisa/Disa president Gustavo Lopez says. "People may have been looking for it before and couldn't find it," Lopez says, adding that the band did its first stateside promotional tour close to the album's release, not months later.

Though Fonovisa convinced music buyers to position "Almas Gemelas" near bigger acts, in endcaps and in circulars, its success "has a lot to do with the group starting to work in the U.S. and people seeing them. They started to have better rotation on radio," Fonovisa Mexico GM Toño Silva says. (The single "Te Ves Fatal," one of many written for the band by prolific Mexican songwriter Fato, is No. 8 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart.)

Lopez says the band's success in Mexico was a help and a hindrance in breaking it stateside. "They were so busy in Mexico and having so much success that they didn't want to sacrifice shows to break a new market," Lopez says. Then there's the cost of transporting a group with many members to the States for promotion; El Trono has six, but another band that Fonovisa expects to break bigger in the States, La Original Banda el Limón, has close to 20. "There has to be a major financial commitment from the band. There's no way we could move them around in this economic environment," Lopez says.

COME TOGETHER

"Music makes the people come together," a wise woman once said. That also goes for those who write it, not all of whom do their best work alone. Think Carole King and Gerry Goffin, Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil or Rivers Cuomo and . . . Jermaine Dupri?! Yes, really. For his new album, "Raditude," the Weezer frontman worked with several songwriting pros, including Dupri, Butch Walker and Lukasz "Dr. Luke" Gottwald. This isn't as unusual as it might seem. At an EMI "song camp," writers from different genres searched for the elusive chemistry that creates hits (page 20). And the indie publisher peermusic has already enjoyed some success encouraging cross-genre collaboration (page 23). The right song, they all hope, will unite fans as well.

The Importance Of Being Earnest

When Rivers Cuomo Dons His Snuggie And Writes Songs For Weezer, He Does It Out Of Love For His Fans. Really.* By Cortney Harding

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ERIN PATRICE O'BRIEN

CONTRARY TO WHAT SEEMS LIKE POPULAR opinion, Rivers Cuomo is not screwing with his fans. At first, it might be a little hard to believe. After all, Weezer tends to do things like play late-night shows in Snuggies emblazoned with the band's name and make music videos featuring a cast of YouTube stars in hopes of creating the ultimate viral clip. But on Weezer's new album, "Raditude," Cuomo is nothing if not sincere in trying to appeal to listeners: It features a number of tracks that adhere to the band's tried-and-true pop rock formula as well as collaborations with Jermaine Dupri, Lil Wayne and songwriter Dr. Luke. Released Nov. 3, the set sold 66,000 copies in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan. "My goal is to make music that I love and that my fans love," Cuomo says, sitting on a sofa at a hotel in midtown Manhattan. "The thing that bothers me most is people think I am intentionally trying to piss off the audience." Cuomo adds, "It's been the case since our first album that people thought we were just being sarcastic and ironic. When I wrote 'The Sweater Song,' to me it was a very sad song about depression, and people heard it on the radio and thought it was hysterical. Then I wrote 'Beverly Hills,' a very sincere song about my cravings for notoriety and celebrity, and everyone thought I was making fun of the Beverly Hills lifestyle." Cuomo says that one of the biggest inspirations for the collaborative nature of the new album came from Weezer fans themselves and their response to the Hootenanny tour, formally dubbed the Troublemaker tour, where fans were asked to come onstage and play songs with the band. "It was so fun I wanted to keep the collaborative process going, and I started calling other musicians up and asking them to jam," he says. Butch Walker was one of those musicians, and he just so happened to live down the street from the Weezer frontman in Los Angeles. "I walked over to his house and we started talking about high school reunions," Walker says. "We looped the idea back and forth on the guitar for a few hours and came up with 'The Girl Got Hot.' "

Walker says that on another occasion he brought some old Meatloaf albums to Cuomo's house. "Rivers wasn't familiar with Meatloaf, and he loved the idea of coming up with something that had a crazy, long, parenthetical title," he says. "The end result of that was '(If You're Wondering If I Want You To) I Want You To.' "

Dupri might not have lived as close to Cuomo, but he's been following Weezer's career since the '90s. "I wrote the song 'Can't Stop Partying' one night, and in my mind, I had always been a big Weezer fan, from the 'Buddy Holly' song they did with that video and 'Happy Days,' " he says. "The things Rivers was saying in that record caught me—'What's with these homies dissing my girl'—he was talking my type of language on a rock record. It was something that always stayed with me."

Dupri says Cuomo's ability to write across genres was what convinced him to work with Weezer. "One night I was messing around writing songs, and this idea came and I was like, 'It'll be perfect for Weezer because they talk that language, they speak like I do, but to a different crowd,' " he says. "It doesn't come off exactly the same but basically they are the same words. I immediately asked if someone can get the song to Weezer."

Until "Raditude," Cuomo had written all of Weezer's songs either by himself or with his bandmates. He usually didn't write while touring; instead he waited until he got off the road before working on new material.

"As a songwriter, I usually have to do a lot of revision to get the exact right tone," he says. "The first draft can sound too cliché or ironic or just be off, and I have to keep moving things around. I struggled with that on the first single, '(If You're Wondering If I Want You To) I Want You To,' because the lyrics are very sweet, but I wanted to give it some edge."

Cuomo's songwriting process has changed throughout his career. "When I was starting out, I wrote more stuff in just one shot," Cuomo says. "Now I'm able to walk away for a week or two and then come back and pick it up and rework it."

But despite the fact that Cuomo had written so many hits on his own, he shied away from writing with others until fairly recently. "The first time I co-wrote with someone was about two years ago," he says. "Shirley Manson [from Garbage] said she was calling up her favorite artists and getting together with them to write songs. It was really fun for me, and I started to get into it."

Cuomo then decided to try writing with the teen pop duo Aly & AJ, describing the sessions as a "great learning experience." After those two projects—and the inspiration of the hootenannies—he decided to reach out to other writers for the new Weezer album.

"I remember going to Dr. Luke's house, thinking that we were going to write a song for someone else, but a few of them started to sound like good songs for Weezer," he says. "The way it has always worked is that I play all the songs I write for the other members of Weezer, and the band decides which songs they want to move forward with."

Not all the collaborations made the cut for "Raditude." Cuomo says he wrote a song with Greg Wells that wound up on the forthcoming Adam Lambert album, and a song written with Brendon Urie of Panic! at the Disco is still in limbo. "If Panic wants it, they have first dibs, but if not, it could work for Weezer," he says. And he's been working with Katy Perry on some tracks for her forthcoming album, although he's unsure which, if any, she'll use.

ALL BY HIMSELF

While Cuomo was willing to hand over the reins when it came to songwriting on "Raditude," there's another place he has kept all the control in-house: publishing. Cuomo and Weezer have never signed a deal with an indie or major, instead hiring Wixen Music president Randall Wixen to administer their publishing agreements. Cuomo adds that BMI pays him directly for performance royalties and the label pays him for mechanicals.

"When Weezer finished our first album in 1994, our manager passed it around to different publishers, and I think the best offer we got at the time was something like $150,000," Cuomo says. "Even though I didn't have a dime to my name, I said, 'That's not enough; Weezer is going to sell millions of records.' My manager was pretty upset with me because that was his first chance to make any real commission."

Even though Weezer's catalog would fetch far more than $150,000 now, Cuomo says he prefers not to sign any deals. "It just came up again, actually," he says. "A whole different type of corporation is getting interested in buying catalogs, and a couple made offers. They were two figures greater than what I was getting offered in 1994, but I still feel like Weezer is worth more."

Wixen says acts like Weezer that don't need to use their publishing to secure advances or loans are smart to hold on to their own rights. "I have 1,700 clients, including Cheap Trick and Neil Young, that have gotten off the advance cycle," he says. "Rivers is in the same mold. They want greater control and to be more involved in the decision-making processes when it comes to their songs."

Wixen adds that Cuomo takes his publishing business very seriously. "I took Rivers to lunch a while back to explain how some things work, and he took notes the entire time," he says. "He makes very cautious, very well-reasoned decisions."

But being cautious doesn't mean Cuomo is reticent about licensing. "I have a few guidelines, like no alcohol, no fast food, that sort of thing," he says. "But we license stuff about once a month."

Cuomo adds that the most-licensed track in the Weezer catalog is "Islands in the Sun," from its self-titled 2001 album. "The funny thing is, the song wasn't a real radio hit," he says. "I can only speculate that it's because the song has a cleaner guitar sound, which makes it easier for a more mainstream audience."

Weezer had more success with "Beverly Hills," a track from "Make Believe," which was released in 2005. While the album received a critical drubbing, the single took off, peaking at No. 10 on the Billboard Hot 100.

Weezer's sales have varied widely during its career. Both of the band's self-titled albums, one released in 1994 and the other in 2001, are its top sellers, with the earlier album selling 3.3 million copies and the later selling 1.6 million, according to Nielsen SoundScan. "Make Believe" sold 1.2 million, "Pinkerton" (1996) sold 850,000, and "Maladroit" (2002) sold 614,000. "The Red Album," which was released just last year, sold 450,000.

But even with a strong sales record, Cuomo says Weezer didn't always feel secure in its relationship with its label. "We were waiting for a call telling us we were going to be droppe in 1998 and 1999," he says. " 'Pinkerton' came out in 19 and did nothing, and Geffen got bought by Interscope. W were expecting the call to tell us it was game over, but the ca never came."

Cuomo says the band's strong fan base revived it from th dead after the commercial disappointment of "Pinkerton "We just started playing shows again, and everything w selling out," he says. "We jumped on the Warped tour in 200 which was not something a lot of people expected. I think th main thing for us is that we don't get caught in playing a rol acting how a band like us is supposed to act."

WEEZER-IZING

"I don't think we're doing anything radically different wi the campaign for 'Raditude,' " says Steve Sherr, head of ro marketing at Interscope. "What we do have is a plan that 'Weezer-ized.' For instance, we would normally do a TV cai paign, but Rivers came up with the idea of creating a Weez Snuggie and an informercial about the Snuggie to run on T So he reinvented it within the parameters of the idea."

Sherr says that, despite conventional wisdom, the fact th Weezer put out another album so recently is an asset, no liability. "A lot of artists who go away have trouble," he say "With Weezer's last album, they had been gone for a bit, there was an element of them needing to reintroduce thei selves. This is a better strategy, and I wish more artists wou do it. I certainly think Weezer will benefit from it.

"The great thing about Rivers is that he's not concern with genres and he wants to reach a lot of people," Sherr sa For example, Cuomo and his bandmates recently taped interview for the teen site Alloy.com—not a traditional mec outlet for a band of men in their late 30s and early 40s.

Reaching people can sometimes mean absurd perfor ances; at KROQ Los Angeles' Weenie Roast, the band mei bers not only performed in their Snuggies but also cover Lady Gaga's "Poker Face." At a series of intimate shows New York, Weezer covered Coldplay's "Viva La Vida" and t Killers' "Human"; for the former, Cuomo read the lyrics a printed sheet, to the delight of the crowd.

Cuomo says the band's live set is usually a mix of old a new tracks. "We're really trying to create as much joy in t room as we can," he says. "So we have to factor in our ov interests, as well as the interests of the other 15,000 peo in the room."

He adds that the atmosphere of joy is a departure from e lier Weezer sets. "I was a real shoegazer up until 2005, and th I started to break out of my shell a bit," he says. "Last yea started to go a little bit crazier, and now I'm totally off the wal

The band is also playing shows for Hot Topic and MySpa and is planning to tour in December and January, then aga in the summer. Weezer hosted an album signing on the d of release at a Los Angeles Best Buy, and an AOL session, cluding a duet with Sara Bareilles, aired before the albu was released.

The video for "(If You're Wondering If I Want You To) I W You To" recently began making the rounds on the Intern and keeping with the band's tradition of making quirky, hig quality videos, depicts an over-the-top, comically violent sm town scene. "We really like to do videos and interact with mu video directors," guitarist Brian Bell says. "We've never work on the technical side of the videos, but we think it's good to involved with their creation on some level."

"We feel that videos are still super important for Weeze Cuomo says. "When we put out 'The Red Album' last ye the video for 'Pork and Beans' [which featured stars of oth viral videos] did such a great job for us in terms of getting t song out there and getting the word out about the albu Something like 15 million people saw it in a short period time, so I feel like it was worth the investment."

Cuomo is well aware that he has invested plenty in "Ra tude" and that the gamble might not pay off. But, as his c laborator Walker notes, even if he stumbles, he's still movi forward. "I think Rivers sees this as a social experiment try and push himself creatively," he says. "He's willing to e brace the weird, because he thinks he owes it to his fans t to repeat himself."

The Billboard Q&A: Jermaine Dupri

After Writing Two Songs For Weezer's 'Raditude,' The Songwriter/Producer/Label Chief Wants To Keep Selling Without Rock | By Mariel Concepcion

WHEN RIVERS CUOMO penned the opening lyrics Weezer's "Buddy Holly," he probably never imagined he'd making a fan out of R&B/hip-hop producer/songwriter Jermaine Dupri.

"When I heard Rivers saying, 'What's with the homies dissin' y girl/Why do they got to front,' I became a big fan," says the lanta-based music mogul, who has crafted tunes for major tists like Usher, Mariah Carey and Janet Jackson. "He was king my type of language in a rock record and it always stayed th me. They talk like I do, but to a different crowd—we're ba- cally speaking the same words."

The admiration has now turned into collaboration, with Dupri getting a songwriter's credit on Weezer's latest album, "Raditude," released Nov. 3 on Geffen Records. Dupri talked to Billboard about jumping genres in his songwriting—and how his label, So So Def, is expanding into branding.

This is the first time you ventured outside of hip-hop and R&B and wrote for a rock act. How did "I Can't Stop Partying" come about?

I was in the studio one night and I was on my wild shit, like, "I can't stop partying"—that's exactly how I felt that night. Like, "This is my life. This is what's going on." So, I recorded myself playing the drums and singing, freestyling, and then I had my engineer put some guitar licks on there. I immediately got into it and I asked someone to get it to Weezer.

Were you just trying your luck? Or did you really think Weezer would go for it?

I didn't think they'd do the song at all. This is the first time someone's taken a song I wrote from a different genre—it was a shot in the dark.

Plus, I'd done this a hundred times before—I go in the studio, I write what I'm feeling, and sometimes I just throw that stuff away. That's actually what happened with [Usher's] "Confessions"—that's what I was going through at the time: I had to confess to my girl I had a baby by someone else. I write songs all the time and don't give them to others, but this time I talked to [producer] Dallas Austin and I told him I had rock songs that I wanted to get placed.

Have you always been a rock fan?

I've been a big rock fan all my life and Nirvana is probably one of my favorite groups. But I also pay attention to lyrics. If you listen to "Let It All Hang Out"—the other song I wrote for Weezer—I have Rivers quote a Jay-Z line ["I feel like Jay-Z/This can't be life"]. I thought about it for a minute and I wondered how people were going to take it. But, I kept referencing the "Buddy Holly" record and I knew we spoke the same language. It was a perfect marriage.

How did Lil Wayne end up on the track? And how did Polow Da Don become the producer on it?

I don't know how they got Polow to do the beat. I think the label had it remixed to make it a bit more dance and rock, and that's how it came about. It's kind of funny because I was in the studio with Usher and Polow was working with him and he was like, "Did you hear the song you wrote for Weezer? I produced it." It was weird. It was the first project where I didn't have my hands all over it, but, this is how it feels to be a songwriter and it's something I definitely want to do more of. Now I hope I've opened the door for other producers to ask me to write songs for them.

Universal is also responsible for getting Lil Wayne on the track. I think with Wayne wanting to do rock, it is a smart move.

How does it feel to get songwriting credit apart from your production work, especially on a rock project?

It just feels like I personally went somewhere else in my life. I'm always watching what people say and speak about me, and I'm always known as a producer. Even with Mariah and Usher's records—I wrote all of those and they never talk about me as the writer. But this time Polow did the beat and I wrote it, and it just puts me in a different place. That's what longevity is about in this business. I've written millions of records, but this is my first time experiencing this feeling. It's like Jermaine Dupri coming from a whole different place. It's definitely one of the most proud moments of my career because I get to do something that hasn't been done in my era. It's a beautiful thing that I can be a part of something I believe will turn into something big.

Now that you've attained this feat, what's next for you and So So Def?

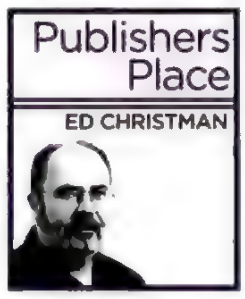
So So Def is independent now. The brand is worldwide and for the things I want to do and the places I want to take my artists, I don't have to have major-label backing anymore. Right now I want to help introduce my first female artist in a long time: Dondria. I found her on YouTube and on Nov. 23 I'm putting her first single out titled "You're the One." I'm very excited about her project. We also have [producer/songwriter] Johnta Austin's album coming soon after.

I have a new watch, Nu Pop Movement, available now. I started this company with Pascal Mouawad and it's inspired by pop music. Mouawad came to me with the idea. He already had a luxury line of watches with diamonds, and although people always used to think of me as the flashy money guy, I felt like I wanted to do something else. So, we're starting with a digital watch with a big face and loud colors that runs for about $150. It's in the same neighborhood of G-Shock and Swatch watches.

How about your own songwriting and producing?

Aside from my weekly DJ'ing residency in Vegas, I'm also on upcoming projects by Usher, Monica and Nelly. But, for right now, I want to go back and focus on finding and creating my own artists—that's the So So Def mentality moving forward.

I just want to find ways to continue to make it exciting or else I won't be around anymore. I've been doing it the same for the past 20 years, but now I want to promote Dondria and figure her out. I want to reach people and have them see something I've created.



If you don't have this social networking and blogging game figured out, then you're dead in the water. Labels aren't taking care of artists like they used to. People have to get with the new way of promoting artists and music and I, for one, am definitely not trying to be left out.

EMI Stays On Top

EMI MUSIC PUBLISHING GROUP captured the largest share of the 100 most popular U.S. radio airplay songs in the third quarter, outdistancing its rivals for the third consecutive three-month period.

The company snared a 19.5% share of the quarter's top 100 airplay songs, with a share in 45 songs in the rankings, up from 39 in the second quarter when it had a 17.3% share. EMI's third-quarter showing this year exceeded the 18.3% share it had during the same period a year earlier and represented its best performance since first-quarter 2008, when it topped the publisher rankings with a 21.4% share.

Radio airplay is calculated based on the overall top 100 detecting songs from the 1,630 radio stations monitored electronically by Nielsen BDS for the three months that ended Sept. 30. The Harry Fox Agency researches the publishers' split for each track to calculate their share of those songs.

Sony/ATV Music Publishing ranked second for the third quarter in a row with a 17.1% share, up from 14.2% in the second quarter and 15.5% in the same period last year, when the company ranked third. Its top songs included shares in Taylor Swift's "You Belong With Me," the quarter's No. 1 airplay song; "Best I Ever Had"; and Lady Gaga's "LoveGame" (No. 7).

Universal Music Publishing Group ranked third in the quarter with a 12.5% share, up from 11.9% in the second quarter and halting a continuous decline in the company's market share since third-quarter 2008, when it had a 20.6% share. Songs it had a share in included "Knock You Down," "Best I Ever Had" and Pitbull's "I Know You Want Me (Calle Ocho)" (No. 8).

Coming in fourth place was Warner/Chappell Music, which scored an 11.9% share of the third quarter's top songs, down from 14.1% in the second quarter when the company ranked third, but up from 11.7% in the third quarter of last year. Kobalt Music Group came in fifth place for the sixth consecutive quarter, with a 6.1% share in the third quarter, down from 7.4% in the second quarter but up from 3.8% in the third quarter of last year. Kobalt had a share in 12 top airplay songs, including "Knock You Down," "Waking Up in Vegas" and Pink's "Please Don't Leave Me" (No. 10).

Bug Music/Windswept Holdings ranked sixth with a 4% market share, slipping from 4.2% in the second quarter but marking a slight improvement from 3.8% during the same period last year. Bug had a share in eight of the top songs, including Kings of Leon's "Use Somebody" (No. 5).

Cherry Lane Music Publishing captured a 2.9% share to come in seventh for the third quarter, marking its fifth appearance on the top 10 publishers airplay chart since Bil board launched the chart in second-quarter 2006. Continental Drift

Pan-European Licensing Inches Closer

By Tom Ferguson

WHEN THE EUROPEAN COMMISSION Online Roundtable on Music issued an October statement signed by publishers, collecting societies and online music services that pledged to improve access to music online for European consumers, one might have thought that the fog of confusion around Pan-European licensing of publishing rights was finally lifting.

The statement included a commitment to "pursuing new [European Union] licensing platforms comprising the repertoires of several collecting societies." And Neelie Kroes, EC commissioner for competition and the roundtable's chair, hailed the document as "the first time players from various parts of the market have agreed on a common road map" (Billboard.biz, Oct. 20).

But there's still no guarantee that the road map won't lead to a dead end, since PRS for Music (United Kingdom), SACEM (France) and STIM (Sweden)—all of which signed the statement—are also among the rights groups appealing the EC's July 2008 decision that they must facilitate Pan-European licensing of performance rights.

Jeremy Fabinyi, the London-based acting CEO of PRS for Music, says the two actions "do not affect each other," noting that the round table was organized by the EC's Competition Directorate but the statement was not an official EC document.

Meanwhile, the collecting society appeals grind through the labyrinthine European legal system, even as the societies themselves attempt to meet the EC requirements.

"We're doing everything we can to comply with the [2008] decision even though we don't agree with it," Fabinyi says. "We don't want further action against us, and we don't want to be fined."

In total, 22 societies appealed the EC decision in the European Court of First Instance in Luxembourg. The EC told the 24 member societies of the umbrella organization CISAC to review their system of reciprocal contracts and drop territorial exclusivity clauses on the grounds that they presented "a significant impediment" to single-market development.

The EC wants collecting societies to offer online services/broadcasters a single license covering repertoire represented by CISAC's members. But the vast majority of CISAC members argue against changing existing practices, which allow them to ensure that license fees reach appropriate rights holders across the continent.

The CISAC members' series of national reciprocal agreements let each member collect rights for repertoire used in their market on behalf of their fellow societies. They then pass that revenue—minus an administration fee—to the appropriate national entity for distribution to rights holders; the national society receiving that revenue also takes an administration fee.

Reform, Kroes said, would let collecting societies compete on cost and quality of service, and Pan-European licenses would facilitate the development of satellite, cable and Internet broadcasting. Such a process would also allow services like iTunes and 7digital to operate a single Pan-European music store. Kroes added that authors would also benefit from only a single administration fee.

It could also mean that a handful of larger societies could dominate the continent, however.

With decisions on the appeals not expected until 2010, each society has devised its own Pan-European licensing strategy.

"There's a huge amount of activity here," says Jez Bell, executive director for broadcast and online at PRS, which has issued Pan-European licenses for its own repertoire to Amazon, Beatport, Nokia's Comes With Music, Qtrax and Spotify, with others on the way. Other societies have formed continent-wide alliances like Armonia, which groups the repertoire of SACEM (France), SIAE (Italy) and SGAE (Spain)—although it has yet to strike any deals.

The major publishers also have their own strategies. Mechanical rights for EMI Music Publishing's Anglo-American catalog are handled by CELAS, a joint venture between PRS and the German society GEMA. Warner/Chappell, Sony/ATV and Universal Music Publishing all have their own partnerships with European societies for continent-wide licensing (see map, page 19).

The only CISAC members not appealing the EC decision are the Belgian society SABAM (which declined to comment for this article) and BUMA/STEMRA of the Netherlands.

BUMA/STEMRA CEO Cees Vervoord backs the EC decision, saying that "it is not [appropriate for] these times that societies such as BUMA/STEMRA can only license Internet music stores in their own country, for distribution in their own country."

CISAC director of legal, political and strategic affairs David Uwemedimo disagrees. "The system of reciprocal representation and the network of contracts built up over the past 100 years have certainly served the interests of our members and the users," he says.

Among those backing CISAC is the European Broadcasting Union, which represents national broadcasters and their online services across the continent.

Heijo Ruijsenaars, head of intellectual property at the EBU's legal and public affairs department, says the EC "underestimated the risk for a fragmentation of rights and/or repertoire." The EBU favors access to all available repertoire through reciprocal deals, rather than competition among societies offering Europe-wide rights.

A coalition of other broadcasters headed by the Luxembourg-based giant RTL back the EC, as do the European Digital Media Assn.—whose members include Amazon, iTunes and Napster—and the IFPI.

"The societies must adapt to the new digital cross-border environment," an IFPI representative says. "Effective collective licensing that would enable Pan-European licenses for world repertoire would help the digital markets grow in Europe."

But, despite Kroes' road map, this has some way to go, according to Alyssa Tisné, director of strategy and business affairs at 7digital. "In practice," she says, "we are a long way off from a seamless single European market and a user-friendly licensing system."

PRS for Music has been Europe's most proactive society in striking Pan-European deals for its own repertoire. "Business moves on," says executive director for broadcast and online Jez Bell. "We've had the [European Commission] decision—whatever happens with the appeal process, we needed to comply in the meantime, and we need to push and make sure that we're acting and licensing in the members' best interests." PRS has also been active through CELAS, the joint venture it set up with the German society GEMA in December 2007 to digitally license the mechanical rights of EMI Music Publishing's Anglo-American catalog. CELAS has about 30 significant Pan-European deals with music services, including 7digital, iTunes, Nokia and Omnifone. PRS is also a member of Warner/Chappell's Pan-European digital licensing initiative (PEDL), which allows digital services to license Pan-European mechanical rights for Anglo-American repertoire from any PEDL member society.

Along with the respective Spanish and Italian organizations SGAE and SIAE, SACEM is part of the Armonia alliance that offers Pan-European licensing of the three societies' domestic repertoire. While appealing the EC decision, in September 2008 it also declared its willingness in principle to entrust other collecting societies with the Pan-European licensing of its own repertoire. SACEM has an agreement with Universal Music Publishing Group to handle Pan-European digital licensing of Universal's catalog through its Direct European Administration and Licensing initiative, which has deals with a number of services, including Amazon, Nokia's Comes With Music and Spotify. SACEM is also part of the Warner/Chappell PEDL initiative. "SACEM wishes to actively contribute," a representative says, "in conditions guaranteeing the respect of authors', composers' and publishers' interests, to granting multiterritorial licenses that are needed to support the growth of legitimate online and mobile services in Europe."

In addition to being a member of Armonia with SIAE and SACEM, SGAE also does Pan-European licensing as part of Warner/Chappell's PEDL initiative. In June, it struck a Pan-European deal with the digital music subscription service eMusic for the Latin and Spanish-language catalogs administered by SGAE through deals with Sony/ATV, EMI Music Publishing and peermusic, plus several Latin American authors' collecting societies. Earlier in the year, it struck a Pan-European licensing agreement with Nokia's Comes With Music for the same catalog. According to director of legal services Pablo Hernandez, SGAE is open to striking alliances with other societies "to guarantee efficiency in the administration of each piece of repertoire."

Although, like the majority of CISAC members, SIAE appealed the EC decision in the Court of First Instance in Luxembourg, it has complied with it. In the future, the group plans to organize its non-domestic activities under the Armonia project, which will license its repertoire on a multiterritorial basis. "We believe that the commission's decision is just an attempt to achieve a more effective management of digital rights in Europe," an SIAE representative says. "Further steps will be necessary in respect of the interests of all the rights holders involved."

How Pan-European Licensing Is Changing The Publishing Business

With its close neighbor BUMA/STEMRA, the Belgian society SABAM is one of only two CISAC member societies that didn't file an appeal at the Court of First Instance in Luxembourg. SABAM declined to comment on its position for this story. But it was one of the first European societies to attempt to set up the mechanism for Pan-European licensing with the launch of its SOLEM initiative in late 2007. SOLEM was intended to be a European one-stop shop for online and broadcast rights, but SABAM put SOLEM on hold in 2008. In October, SABAM joined Warner/Chappell's PEDL, allowing it to offer Pan-European digital licenses for the publisher's Anglo-American repertoire.

BUMA/STEMRA ruffled the feathers of other collecting societies in 2008 by issuing a Pan-European license to Beatport. In response, the United Kingdom's PRS for Music and Germany's GEMA successfully took court action against BUMA/STEMRA. Since January, BUMA/STEMRA has been a member of Warner/Chappell's PEDL initiative. It hasn't appealed the EC decision because "we need a European solution to a uniquely European situation," Vervoord says, "which promotes more competition between collecting societies while protecting the incomes of all rights holders."

GERMANY
CISAC MEMBER: GEMA
HEAD: Harald Heker, CEO
MEMBERS: 63,752

In addition to jointly representing EMI Music Publishing's Anglo-American catalog with PRS for Music in CELAS, GEMA operates a subsidiary, PAECOL, which licenses Sony/ATV Europe Music Publishing's Anglo-American repertoire for mechanical exploitation online. GEMA is also involved in Warner/Chappell's PEDL initiative. But GEMA has also appealed the EC decision on the grounds that it is an inadequate solution to continent-wide licensing. "We need very urgently European guidelines for collecting societies that clearly tell us what our rights and our duties are," Heker says. In August 2008, GEMA successfully obtained an injunction against the Dutch society BUMA/STEMRA and the online music service Beatport after BUMA/STEMRA issued a Pan-European license that included GEMA's repertoire. GEMA has yet to strike its own deal with the service.

THE REST
So far, 17 other national societies in European Union member countries have appealed the 2008 EC decision.

10 Songwriters. Five Days. Three Recording Studios. One Tattoo Of An MPC Sampler

How EMI Music Publishing Uses Its Talent To Brainstorm The Next Hit Song • By David J. Prince

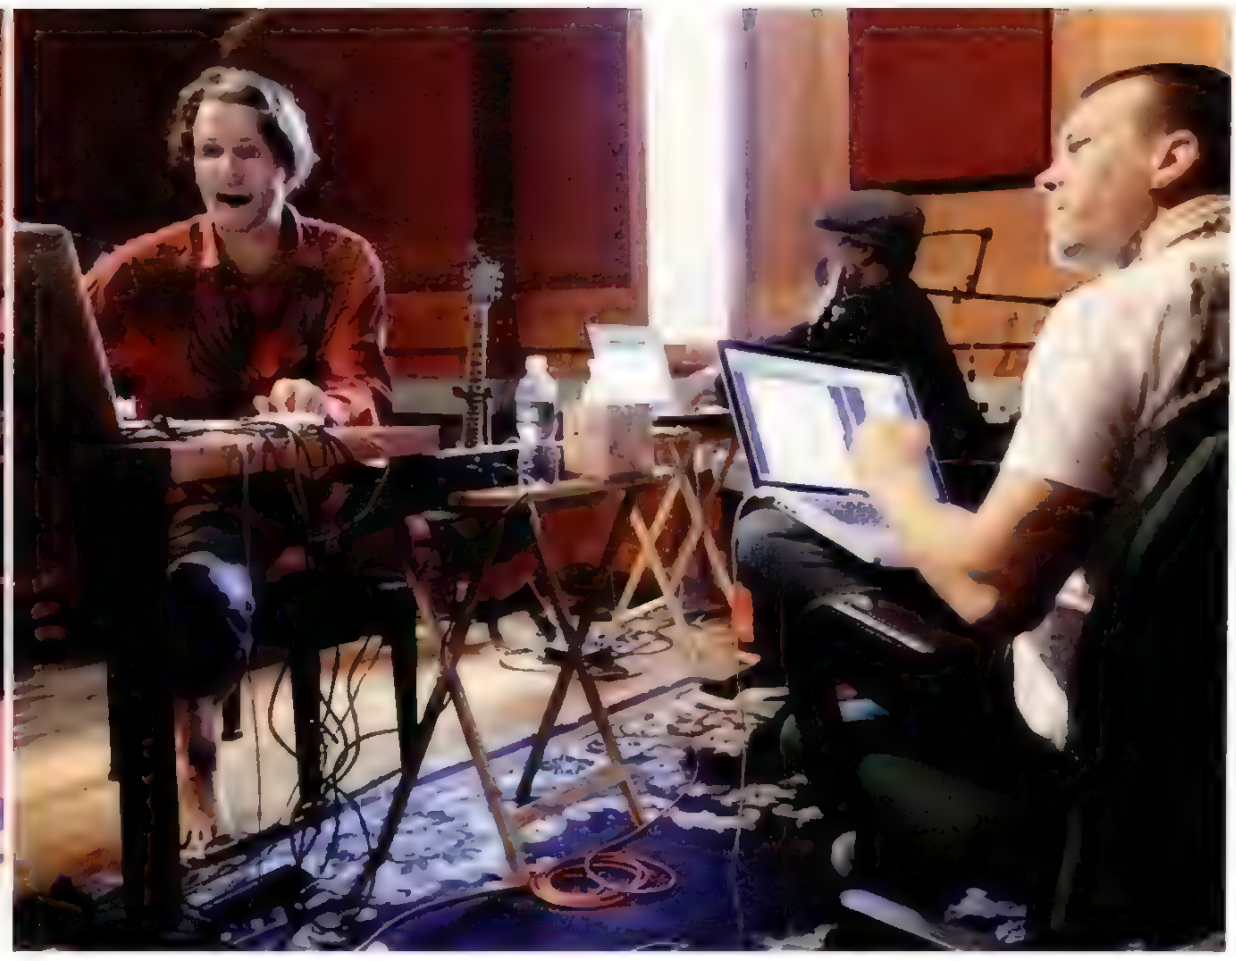
PHOTOGRAPHS BY TIM SOTER

TOBY GAD AND BRIAN HOWES AREN'T WASTING ANY TIME. It's 3 p.m. on a June Monday at Chung King Studios in lower Manhattan, and they're already deep into the melody of a song. Howes, acoustic guitar on his knee, is strumming out a chord progression while singing nonsensical syllables. Gad, one hand on his Macbook Pro keyboard and the other on the keys of a full-size grand piano, taps out a steady beat on the floor with his bare foot. On the opposite side of the recording complex, Keefus Ciancia is still nervously jury-rigging the already twisted wires of his keyboards, Moogs, synths and other low-fi gadgets he brought cross-country from his home studio in Los Angeles. In the control room with him, arrayed along a leather couch, grown-up British teen pop idol James Bourne, John Mayer's bandleader David Ryan Harris and blue-eyed neo-soul artist DQ watch on a computer screen as the newest iPhone models are revealed in real time. In the main studio—the one where Biggie Smalls was famously fellated before recording one of his best-known raps—Jim Jonsin is punching drum patterns into his MPC, a coveted, out-of-production sampler that serves as his control panel (it's also represented in tattoo ink on his arm). David Hodges, pale and also tattooed, tunes his guitar while Damon Sharp paces back and forth with his laptop in hand. Later, they're joined by Steve McEwan, a curly-haired Brit with an almost permanently bemused look on his face.

None of these 10 guys are household names—nor would you recognize any of them passing on the street—but you undoubtedly know their work. This group of songwriters is responsible for some the catchiest pop hits of the past five years—from Beyoncé's "If I Were a Boy" to Lil Wayne's "Lollipop" to Celine Dion's "This Time." Between them, they have written numerous No. 1 songs on the Billboard Hot 100, dozens of top 10 tunes and hundreds of tracks that have been cut by the biggest singers and pop stars working today.

These 10 songwriters share a partner—EMI Music Publishing—which brought them together and paid for the studio time in the hopes that several of the songs they create will become staples of the airwaves before the end of the year.

They call it Song Camp.



ROOKIE OF THE YEAR

The process of creating a hit—the magic combination of inspiration and relevancy that causes a song to resonate with the public—is intangible. But when EMI gathers songwriters with a track record, or the potential to invigorate a creative process, it's a very low risk for something that could turn into a significant financial reward.

Plus, it's fun.

Keefus Ciancia is EMI's new kid on the block. Known around his L.A. hometown as the go-to keyboard session guy for everyone from Dr. Dre to Macy Gray to T-Bone Burnett (who considers him his personal "secret weapon" both in the studio and onstage), Ciancia is a lo-fi studio whiz in the vein of Money Mark Nishita and the Dust Brothers. He honed his chops as Everlast's musical director and played with one of L.A.'s biggest unsung heroes, the 300-plus-pound Benji Hughes, whose double-album collaboration with Ciancia is an underground favorite among Southern California studio rats but sold virtually nothing after its release on New West late last year.

EMI Publishing A&R director Dan McCarroll is convinced Ciancia has the makings of a hit songwriter and recently brought him into the company. Unlike everyone else in the studio this week, Ciancia has yet to write a hit, but McCarroll thinks that the combination of his musical instincts and some of the more experienced songwriters' lyrical and melodic ideas can deliver the winning combination.

For his part, Ciancia is cautiously optimistic. "I'd like to step in and at least see what I can do in there, just to see that side," he says during a break in the setup. "I have a few friends that started doing it, and they're really enjoying it. Plus, I have that thing inside of me where I'm hoping to sneak in, but be able to maybe make radio a little bit better, little by little."

TATTOO YOU

With his fedora, goatee and knee-length shorts, Jim Jonsin very much looks the part of one of hip-hop and R&B's top producers. A one-time DJ, Jonsin's box of gold is a trusted MPC-3000, the long-obsolete sampler coveted for its simplicity and tactile pads that allow producers a hands-on entry point for their beats. Jonsin wears his love for the device—and the sounds it allows him to create—on his sleeve, literally: a lavish tattoo of the box and a mad-looking producer runs up his right arm from wrist to elbow.

Jonsin was at first surprised to find himself the "it" songwriter of the moment. Even though he's been on a hot streak that stretches back to the 2005 Trick Daddy hit "Let's Go," a track that garnered him BMI's urban songwriter of the year award, the former club DJ viewed himself more a producer than writer. But with songwriting credits that include Lil Wayne's "Lollipop," T.I.'s "Whatever You Like" and Soulja Boy Tell'Em's "Kiss Me Thru the Phone," plus studio sessions with everyone from Beyoncé and Ludacris to Flo Rida and Jordin Sparks, he's come to a better understanding of his talent.

"My favorite kind of music on my iPod is classic rock. I listen to rock, R&B, pop music more than hip-hop," he says. "But hip-hop is what I grew up with, it was the thing to do, and you know, I'm 39 now . . . it's more of a younger man's thing, especially with the newer artists. My favorite thing to do is to kick back and listen to some Lynyrd Skynyrd or some Bad Company, Fleetwood Mac, Pink Floyd, you know?"

WRITER'S MARKET

While many professional songwriters relish the virtually anonymous role of musical Wizard of Oz, others are wanna-be rock stars trapped in a mere mortal's body. At first glance, it would be hard to see David Hodges as simply a studio geek: With his translucent white skin covered with inked-on religious iconography; boyish, square face; and pitch-perfect tenor, he looks and sounds like the kind of guy who would set millions of "Twilight"-loving teenagers' hearts atwitter. He certainly knows how to speak their language.

Born and bred in Arkansas, Hodges grew up in a musical fundamentalist family. He wrote his first song at 15 and by his next birthday had decided his destiny was to become a professional musician. Five years later, in 2000, he teamed up with two local high school kids named Ben Moody and Amy Lee and formed the band Evanescence. The band signed to Wind-up within a year and spent the next two holed up in L.A.'s notorious Oakwood Apartments writing and recording the dozen songs that would make up the band's debut album.

Hodges quit the group in December 2002, three months before the release of "Fallen," an album that would go on to sell 7.3 million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan; put the band on stage in front of 60,000 people per night; and eventually earn the musicians Grammy Awards in 2004 for best new artist and best hard rock performance.

Instead, Hodges returned to Little Rock, read books, drank coffee and occasionally watched his former bandmates on TV. "I would see Ben and Amy on the Jay Leno show and part of me really was jealous of it," he says. "But there was a big part of me that was like, 'Man, I've got a good gig here.' Collect the checks and sit at home and hang out with friends and just kind of figure out the next thing. It was a pretty wild experience."

MOVIE MAGIC

Jonsin has "Twilight" on the brain. Specifically, he's thinking about "New Moon," the forthcoming sequel to the hugely popular teenage vampire movie, and in particular, the song that will play as the final credits roll. His wife, sister and niece are deeply immersed in the series and its lore; Atlantic Records chairman/CEO Craig Kallman is calling for soundtrack advice; and the series' author, Stephenie Meyer, is a friend.

But Jonsin realizes that the hip-hop sounds for which he's known don't fit the mood of the film nor the hordes of teenage girls who get off on the themes of repressed sexual desire and danger. But his thundering drums are proving to be an excellent departure point for the lyricists to explore those emotions.

"I try to start with sounds or noises that are unique . . . keyboard sounds, drum sounds," Jonsin says. "Once I have that set up, it's just pulling out the right guitar, setting up the right amp, getting the right bass guitar. Getting the right sound set up. Once that's done we add chord changes, find the right chord changes. Then we add melody, then we start adding drums, stuff like that. That's pretty much how we do it."

"Jim always amazes me, because out of nowhere he just gets these huge amazing sounds," Steve McEwan says. "They always sound refreshing and always sound really current and modern, and he's always a pleasure to work with."

Jonsin is a veteran of several EMI camp outings, the previous one hosted in his own Florida studios.

"Oh, yeah, it's less pressure," he says. "I'd like to say that these people were handpicked to work together—we've done it before. Most of us are like family. If we can hang out in room, drink a beer and eat some food, we sure as hell can jar and make music. There are writers and producers with ego: but they're not here."

BRIT POP

"I always wanted to get a cut to the Backstreet Boys, because was a big fan of the way their records have sounded in the past James Bourne says with a light British lilt. "They recent recorded one of the songs that I wrote with a bunch of peop at one of these camps."

Bourne is the baby-faced youngster in this group of vetera songwriters, but he's had more hits on the charts as a perform than anyone else in the studio this week. His band Busted U.K. No. 1s include "You Said No," "Crashed the Wedding "Who's David?" and "Thunderbirds Are Go." He bounces e ergetically from room to room, quick with a lyric or a melod

Bourne learned the power and reach of pop music at an ear age. His self-guided guitar lessons consisted of playing alor to the top 40 songs he heard on the radio as a tween, and h quickly recognized the patterns and similarities that emerge from his favorite ones. By the age of 12 he was writing his ow and at 17 he had his first hit, "What I Go to School For," wit his band Busted.

"We were an unknown band, but it went straight to No. 3 c the U.K. charts—ahead of 'Cleaning Out My Closet' by Er inem," he says. "It was a real amazing time. I was in my fir year of college and a lot of big songs released that week—Bc Jovi, Eminem—and it went in front of both of them."

Signed to Universal in 2002, Busted went on to score eig top 10 singles in the United Kingdom with four of them goi to No. 1 before breaking up abruptly three years later. The mod was clearly a formula for success—two of Bourne's Busted cha hits, "School" and "Year 3000," were rerecorded and repac aged by the Jonas Brothers on their debut, serving as a sprin board for Disney's young discovery to get a foothold on t charts. "Those kids are really cool, and it's really amazing watch them have the kind of success they're having," he say

At 26, Bourne's years as a teen pop star are behind him, b he's settled quite comfortably into the role of behind-the-scen songwriter. Having been in several bands, he's particular adept at working with upcoming singer/songwriters lookir to crack the code of the charts. He's done more Song Camp se sions that he can count and is a firm believer in the power numbers when it comes to writing.

"It's a proven formula that works," he says. "You put [t gether] a number of people who've had successful songs in t past and it normally happens. You maximize the chances of t good result. Here, you don't have to write down and sign off who did what. Most people here have a reputation that th don't really want to ruin. It's the ones with no rep that can g ou into trouble. If you write with people you don't really know, ou can get in really dodgy situations when they go, 'I wrote iat and you didn't.' Here, there's an understanding that it works certain way and everyone accepts it."

REATIVE FREEDOM

iancia long lived in a musical world where pop music rarely ept in. "This week was a lot of names I've never heard of be- ore," he says with a laugh. "It's like, 'Oh, we've got a track for ich-and-such,' and I'm like, 'Oh, yeah, cool.' Almost all of iem I didn't know. My daughter needs to keep me hip to it. m 36. She's 13. She's great; I said, 'OK, you're going to be ny consultant.' "

But as the week wears on, he grows more comfortable and times is downright giddy as the songs in his studio start oming together.

"This is really the first time I've been in a room with a unch of people writing," he says during a cigarette break on he studio's fire escape. "What surprised me the most is just ow quick these guys are, but they're careful. I love throw- ng everything at the wall. I think getting in the mind-set is he biggest thing, like how these guys just come in and you n't think too much, you just go forward. You just dig into . Once they got the storyline, the guys would be going crazy, ke, 'What if it's this? What if it's this?' OK, bam, bam, bam. lelodies always came quick. My favorite was just putting up drum beat, playing some chords and each guy was saying, hat's great!' " lim, silver-haired and seemingly soft-spoken, EMI Publish- g chairman/CEO Roger Faxon doesn't seem as comfortable a recording studio as he is in the boardroom. But as the chief nefactor of the Song Camp, he does have an interest in how e process is going.

So while there's been nary a suit in sight for four long days— d several long nights—of creativity, his arrival is greeted as a lcome respite. But it's also a moment of reckoning. For the first ne all week, the whole group of songwriters gathers together— st in Ciancia's studio, then in Jonsin's—to listen to their songs.

Faxon sits behind the control board, nodding his head as the ngs are cued up and blasted out of the oversized speakers built to every nook of the studio. He nods, he smiles, he makes a ggestion for a minor tweak here and there, while the songwrit- s bounce around the room, miming their various parts, laugh- g at a lyric or wishing there had been time for another take.

Faxon smiles, offers a round of congratulations and slips out e door. Song Camp is over, but the creative fires still burn. ••••

HYBRID THEORY

In Search Of Songs, Peermusic Nurtures Cross-Cultural Collaborations • By Ed Christman

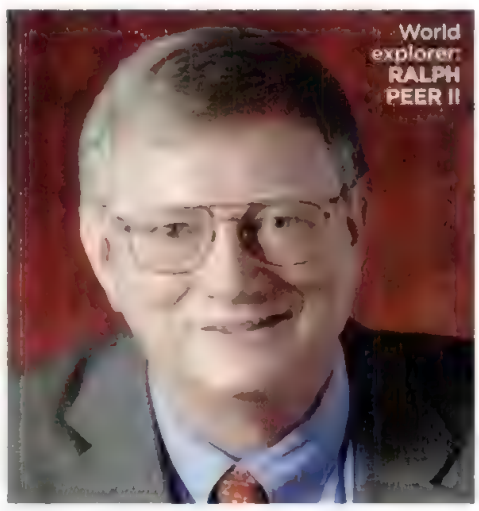
WHEN IT COMES to finding and developing musical talent, peermusic sees the world without borders.

In addition to pursuing the traditional means of searching for songwriting talent, peermusic's staff looks for ways to cross-pollinate musical cultures and styles and move them from one territory to another.

With 34 offices in 28 countries, that philosophy "is very much in the DNA of this firm," chairman/CEO Ralph Peer II says.

While Peer acknowledges that it isn't unusual for publishers to try their luck with a song outside of their home market, such efforts tend to be limited to big hits.

"In addition to the hits that we are fortunate enough to have, we need to also find new sources of music that are outside the mainstream," Peer says. "It's important to us."



How does peermusic nurture cross-border collaborations? Besides circulating music to peermusic staffers, the company holds meetings around the world where employees from different countries have the opportunity to get acquainted with one another. Not only do staffers get to match faces to names, the meetings allow them to communicate and work better together and to more effectively convey their enthusiasm for a song, according to Kathy Spanberger, president/COO of peermusic's Anglo-American region.

When peermusic VP of A&R and film and TV Sam Kling discovered the Australian pop artist Renee Cassar on MySpace, he enlisted the help of the company's Aussie staffers to meet the artist and woo her, which resulted in a joint signing between peermusic's Sydney and Los Angeles offices.

Sydney staffers also helped Cassar's management get the artist signed to Island Australia, while the L.A. office worked closely with the label to develop the album, co-sponsoring songwriting trips for Cassar to L.A. and Nashville, as well as co-funding her U.S. trip to work with producer Luke Ebbin. "Here was a case where our offices in Nashville and L.A. were able to work with someone from another part of the world and get them with the right people," Peer says.

In another example, Yvonne Gomez, peermusic's Latin creative director for the West Coast and Mexico, was listening to music by Swedish songwriters signed to the company and noticed that "sonically and rhythmically, it was similar to what works well in Latin America," Gomez says.

So she had peermusic's Sweden office send her a selection of songs. She picked 10 and sent them to the company's Argentina and Venezuela offices for Spanish lyrical adaptations. For a few of the songs, Gomez had Spanish demo vocals recorded in L.A. to add to the original Swedish instrumental tracks. Armed with those demos, she has been pitching the songs to Latin labels in the United States and Mexico and has distributed them to the company's offices in Latin America so staffers there can pitch the songs in those countries.

World explorer: RALPH PEER II

In yet another example of cross-border collaboration, peermusic arranged for Anahí, a former member of the Latin pop act RBD, to work with U.S.-based British songwriter Richard Harris and a lyricist from Argentina to write songs for her debut solo album. Kling says the trio produced one of the stronger songs on her album "Mi Delirio," due Nov. 24 on EMI Latin.

An unlikely case of transporting a song successfully to a different market occurred when peermusic's Germany office pitched Rihanna's "Umbrella," co-written by peermusic writer Tricky Stewart, to the German rockabilly band the Baseballs, who covered it in English for their debut album, "Strike," released in May on Warner Music International.

"It's easier to move songs from one country to another," Peer says. "Songs can be molded and changed around, and sometimes the song travels better than the songwriter."

Of course, not every collaboration bears fruit right away, especially in areas where the concept of copyright is still catching on. Peermusic formed a partnership last year with the Ghana-based Kampsite Music to develop the West African music publishing marketplace and boost the international profile of the region's music (Billboard, Oct. 18, 2008). A year later, the company is still working with CISAC and other organizations to establish the necessary legal infrastructure.

Even in areas where the necessary copyright protections are in place, exposing musical talent from one country to listeners in another isn't always easy. Or, as Peer puts it, "You have to respect the fact that ears are different somewhere else." ••••

David Renzer, chairman/CEO of Universal Music Publishing Group, hails new digital opportunities but warns of challenges for mechanical and performance income. • By Ed Christman

UNIVERSAL MUSIC PUBLISHING Group chairman/CEO David Renzer oversees a company with revenue nearing the $1 billion mark and a global presence that spans 53 offices and 56 countries.

Since Renzer joined the company in 1996 when it was known as MCA Music Publishing, UMPG has grown dramatically through direct signings and catalog acquisitions, including those of BMG Music Publishing, PolyGram, Ronder and Zomba, where he began his music publishing career and rose to become senior VP/GM in his 10 years there.

Under Renzer's leadership, the company has grown into a powerhouse in production music and launched its Latin music division, which won ASCAP's music publisher of the year award four times, and saw its songwriters win, among many other accolades, 27 Grammy Awards and 22 Latin Grammy Awards, including Latin record, song and album of the year awards.

UMPG has had a busy 2009 on the deal front, acquiring the Warner Bros. Entertainment music catalog and the French production music company Kapagama S.A., securing the exclusive administration rights to the Jimi Hendrix catalog outside of the United States and signing worldwide publishing agreements with Eminem, country star Keith Urban, Academy Award-winning composer A.R. Rahman and Grammy-winning composer/Oingo Boingo co-founder Danny Elfman, among others.

In an interview with Billboard, Renzer talks about his company's recent performance, developments in synch licensing and why publishers should collect a performance right in downloads.

How is UMPG faring in the market?

It's definitely a challenging marketplace. If we look at the various segments of our business, mechanical income continues to decline for the entire industry. We are seeing for the first time some challenges even in the performance income area, which traditionally has shown reliable annual growth. Because radio has taken a significant hit in advertising revenues due to the recession, we are starting to see what might be a flat year for performance income.

Likewise, we are seeing some challenges in traditional synchronization areas [due to] the impact the economy has had on industries like automotive. However, we are doing reasonably well in television and film synch licensing and we are still seeing significant growth in videogames. We are pushing the envelope here all the time in new, nontraditional synch—that is everything from the videogame area to lyric merchandise. Some of that is spilling over into digital areas. Also, we have an incredibly strong release schedule from important artists and songwriters. We have an incredibly strong global production music library business. Our classical publishing and Christian publishing businesses are holding up quite well.

What about the settlement revenue coming from pending and unmatched funds and the new digital revenue coming your way?

We are also seeing some nice seven-figures-type of money for online video streaming. Our company has deals in place with MySpace and YouTube and lots of other digital companies. We are projecting our digital collections to grow significantly next year. Digital is in the 7%-8% range and I think it will grow a couple of percentage points [in 2010].

Having said that, one of the challenges for our business remains the slow growth of digital throughout Europe and many other markets. Europe remains a frustrating market. We continue to emphasize to the European Commission that licensing may be a bit burdensome, but the big issue is we are still competing with free. Piracy remains the No. 1 challenge. What we are seeing in Europe with the French initiative, with their "three strikes" anti-piracy legislation, is very positive and we certainly love that. We look forward to seeing similar legislation enacted in other markets.

What are the challenges that you are facing around the globe?

We are seeing a continued stream of deals from our Pan-European licensing initiative, with big providers like Spotify, Nokia, Omniphone and iTunes. In terms of international issues, Europe has to be an important focus because of the euro value of that region.

In the Latin region, we have concluded digital licensing deals with the other major record companies. We are hoping that this will result in some retroactive money being paid and ease digital licensing across the region. There is also an initiative under discussion in Mexico with the publishers and the local society that could ease digital licensing in that territory.

In Southeast Asia, we've successfully launched our Pan-Asian digital deals with several of the major companies and are seeing solid results from those deals. Finally, we remain focused on emerging markets around the globe, such as our recent deal for Dubai and our growing [joint ventures] in India and Turkey.

How are the revenue streams for interactive streaming, music subscriptions and ad-supported services shaping up? Were payments in line with expectations?

The whole subscription area remains a challenging marketplace. It doesn't appear to be a panacea for our industry. Distributions [from digital service providers] are coming in perhaps a little slower than we would like. The amount of data that has to be gone through in the statements is perhaps causing the process to move slower than we would like. The volume is in the ballpark of our expectations and our projections.

The area online attracting the greatest growth is the streaming services, Pandora and Spotify in Europe. While we are happy to see those sites attract listeners, I believe that they are also potentially replacing sales and the performance right [royalty] might not present enough upside to our writers. So I am a little concerned about that, because I see those sites growing rapidly and not the other sites like the legal subscription sites.

What are the legislative agendas that you wish the industry would pursue next?

Certainly, in the U.S., the issue of performance right in a download is very high on the agenda of both ASCAP and BMI. In terms of getting a fix to that issue, it will be a significant uphill battle. But there is an inequity when you download a TV show or a film or a song [because] the performing right exists in a song download outside the U.S. The emphasis is on the audiovisual download, but it's difficult to separate the issues.

There is definitely an equity issue for a film or television composer who may be getting upfront fees, which are under pressure. They get no mechanical royalty when a TV show is downloaded, so they are really getting shut out with no mechanical and no performance royalty when the shows are downloaded.

What are the opportunities going forward and what is the outlook for 2010?

For the first time, we are seeing revenue from all the new digital services and the new business models beginning to emerge, whether it's the iPhone applications that we are licensing, or online lyric from Gracenote, which has done deals with many sites like Yahoo.

While we have all these challenges in our business, I am still optimistic. As the industry is fragmenting, it does require the clout and sophistication of major publishers to license many of these sites. That's one of the areas that perhaps these days major publishers might be at an advantage in the marketplace. We have the structure to offer Pan-European licensing. I am optimistic about our position in the industry and what these new revenue streams portend for the future.

While we are happy to see [music streaming] sites attract listeners, I believe that they are also potentially replacing sales and the performance right [royalty] might not present enough upside to our writers.

Survival Of The Fittest

Jimmy Wayne Pulls Himself Up By His (Cowboy) Bootstraps

The bright lights and roaring crowds of New York's Madison Square Garden are a long way from the juvenile detention centers of North Carolina where Jimmy Wayne spent parts of his youth. With a new single, a cover of the Hall & Oates classic "Sara Smile," at No. 32 on Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart; a new album of the same name scheduled for release Nov. 23; and a coveted opening slot on Brad Paisley's American Saturday Night tour, Wayne has finally left his turbulent past behind.

Wayne's early life could almost be the subject of a country song. He grew up in and out of foster care and was a homeless teen when he was picked up and placed in a detention center. An elderly couple took him in and helped turn his life around; he went on to college and worked as a prison guard before moving to Nashville.

After the move, Wayne auditioned for industry veteran Scott Borchetta, who then signed him to his first deal on DreamWorks Records in 2001. His self-titled debut, released in 2003, spawned the top 10 hits "I Love You This Much" and "Stay Gone" before DreamWorks closed.

Borchetta, now president/CEO of Big Machine Records and Valory Music, didn't want to let Wayne go and signed him to his new label. In 2008, Wayne released the album "Do You Believe Me Now"; the title track spent three weeks at No. 1 on Hot Country Songs.

"This Jimmy album came together so quickly," Borchetta says of the new release. "Some of these tracks were cut during the 'Do You Believe Me Now' sessions and they kept coming back to me—they were just so good. We then made the decision to cut 'Sara Smile' while Jimmy was still out with Brad Paisley, basically because his fans demanded it. Producer Dann Huff was the final catalyst and injected another level of energy into the album."

He shall overcome: JIMMY WAYNE

The new album was produced by three of country music's heavy hitters—Huff (Rascal Flatts, Bon Jovi, Keith Urban), Nathan Chapman (Taylor Swift) and Mark Bright (Carrie Underwood). The single was produced by Huff and features vocals from Daryl Hall and John Oates. "It's just kind of surreal to hear my voice and their voices on the same song," Wayne says.

"Sara Smile" also includes a song by John Shanks and Keith Urban called "Things I Believe." "Dann said, 'I might have to go ask Keith Urban if he would mind if we cut this song on you,' " Wayne recalls. "He said 'yes' and Dann was surprised that Keith didn't record that himself."

Among the new tunes Wayne penned for the album are "Just Knowing You Love Me," "I'll Never Leave You" and "Elephant Ears," the last of which holds special significance. "It's a combination of my own personal experience and my sister adopting a little girl and just thinking about what kids out there go through in foster homes," Wayne says. "It's a song to bring awareness that those kids need our help."

"I'll Never Leave You" is a tune Wayne wrote with Hall & Oates in mind. "I thought, 'What would I write if I were going to write a Hall & Oates song? What would it sound like?' " he says.

> 'My goal is to be successful in this career and never have to struggle again. I've found something that I really love, not something that I feel like is a job.'

> —JIMMY WAYNE

Wayne performed that song and others during a Nov. 2 taping of "Live From Daryl's House," an online show Hall tapes at his home. The episode will be broadcast Dec. 15 on Hall's site (livefromdarylshouse.com).

Wayne also utilizes Twitter, sending frequent messages, photos and even inviting fans to join him at a local restaurant in Nashville after an Oct. 27 Grand Ole Opry appearance. Starting Nov. 23 the label is running a contest asking fans to send a photo of themselves smiling to Wayne's Twitter account for a chance to talk to the artist. The label is also running a radio contest for fans to receive a customized version of the album that puts the winner's name in the title instead of "Sara."

Wayne has been selected as a Breaker Artist in LP33's "Music Magazine" show that airs in McDonald's locations nationwide. The episode featuring Wayne and the video for "Sara Smile" will run Nov. 30-Dec. 14.

"My goal is to be successful in this career and never have to struggle again," says Wayne, who also helps underprivileged youth. "I've found something that I really love, not something that I feel like is a job. I love it with heart and soul. I worked at it and believed with all my heart that it was going to happen." ••••

6 QUESTIONS with RAKIM

by MARIEL CONCEPCION

Rakim has long been touted as one of the most influential MCs of all time. But even with all the accolades, the New York rapper hasn't forgotten his humble beginnings.

On his third solo album—and first effort in nearly a decade—"The Seventh Seal," due Nov. 17 on his own Ra Records, Rakim says he hopes to "put some love back in New York."

"The majority of this album has that melodic New York sound—I just tried to make it a good, all-around New York album," he says. "That's why I did songs like 'Euphoria,' with [New York rappers] Jadakiss, Busta Rhymes and Styles P—I wanted to make sure our presence was felt."

1 You're about to release your first album in almost a decade. Why did you choose the track "Walk These Streets," featuring newcomer Maino, to reintroduce yourself?

Maino is an artist that I feel walks what he talks—you can tell what he raps about and what he's been through is very similar. You've got a lot of rappers that rap about what they've heard or seen, but I think Maino is one of the rappers that has actually lived it. He has credibility. And that's one of the things I wanted to point out with this album: There's nothing fake on this album. I wanted to make a real album and at the same time show some love to the people I got respect for and vice versa.

2 Which rappers are authentic and excellent right now?

Lil Wayne is doing his thing and so is Drake. But I really like the way Fabolous is holding down New York right now. Jadakiss is also repping New York, heavy.

3 Speaking of New York, what do you think of critics claiming the Big Apple isn't holding its weight in terms of the genre these days?

New York is kind of all over the place with its sound right now. Overall, I think the substance of hip-hop is a little shallow and I think listeners and consumers realize that. We need to get back to a little more consciousness—to the essence of hip-hop, not just partying and negativity.

4 What's to blame for the current state of hip-hop?

Radio plays a big part. Before, labels were able to predict what would be a hit or not, but these days, radio has so much control and power that labels sign acts based on what radio will play. It's unfortunate because a lot of it is politics instead of talent. Everyone is trying to make money, and the genre is being manipulated by money. You have a lot of material out there, especially from New York, that should be getting airplay, but then you have powers that be that push that to the side. If your label puts a lot of money behind your project, then you'll hear your music on the radio. Otherwise, it's a struggle.

5 You signed your last deal in 2000 with Dr. Dre's Aftermath label. Why did you decide to walk away from it three years later?

One of the main reasons why it didn't work out for me and Aftermath is because I felt my music should sound one way and they felt it should sound another. But, I learned a lot from watching Dre, and when I left California, I knew it was time for me to get my own label. I was fortunate enough to team up with Montana and Tuscan Villa for distribution and to be able to drop my album myself.

6 You released your first album, "Paid in Full," in 1987 with your former partner Eric B. Considering your long career, do you feel you get your due?

I feel like I deserve a little more credit. There are certain things that I wish people knew—certain things that I feel I started and certain things that I'm responsible for. Sometimes you wish people knew where a certain style of rapping came from or who was the first one to say whatever. That isn't always the case, though. Hopefully, I can get back to where I start setting trends again. Even more, I hope I make that happen with this album. • •

PRETTY HATE MACHINES

The Bravery Brings Darkness To The Dancefloor

The songs on the Bravery's third studio album, "Stir the Blood," due Dec. 1 on Island Records, have titles like "Red Hands and White Knuckles," "Hatefuck" and "Slow Poison" (the first single)—quite a change from earlier tracks like "An Honest Mistake" and "Believe." Frontman/songwriter Sam Endicott says that the songs on "Stir the Blood" came from a "darker, angrier place" than previous work. But ironically it's a dance album, much like the band's self-titled debut.

This return to form is one reason behind the band's decision to take an unusual step to promote the album—completing a U.S. tour before its release, with only one single sent to radio.

"It's risky, because the profile of the band is down a little bit. We haven't been on tour for a year-and-a-half; our last album ["The Sun and the Moon"] came out over two years ago," manager Pete Galli says. "You're going to play a bit smaller venues than you normally do, because there isn't as much heat." But the idea, he says, is to "rejuvenate the fan base," get longtime listeners excited about the new material and offer opportunities like a presale where those who order the album for $10 at a concert get to meet the band after the show.

"It's old school—they sign up on a piece of paper with their address and we send them a physical CD," Galli says. "We'd talked about doing a download card that fans could use on the day of release, but there's something about getting it in the mail, and that way we can send them the Friday before release. There's a value in getting it first."

Another grass-roots success has been the video for "Hatefuck," which the Bravery produced and distributed online without the label's participation. " 'Hatefuck' has become the biggest fan favorite of any of the new songs," Galli says. "It probably has more momentum than the actual single itself, from a groundswell perspective. But you can't exactly convince your label that your first single should be called 'Hatefuck.' "

Also giving a significant bump to the Bravery's profile before the album's release is Endicott's recent turn as a pop songwriter: He wrote the title track single for Shakira's upcoming album "She Wolf," which has peaked at No. 11 on the Billboard Hot 100 and No. 8 on the Hot Digital Songs chart, in addition to two more songs included on various international releases of the album. The collaboration came about when Shakira contacted "Stir the Blood" producer John Hill, who asked Endicott to write a few tracks to play for her while working on the Bravery album. And while the match seems unlikely at first, Endicott says it was an easy musical transition.

" 'She Wolf' is in a way very similar to Bravery music in that it's based on a dance beat and a disco bassline," Endicott says. "I'm a bass player first and a singer second, so a lot of our stuff is based on that kind of rhythm."

"In the beginning I was worried about what writing a song for Shakira would do for the Bravery's credibility, but it's turned out to be the opposite," says Galli, who adds that Endicott co-wrote a song for an upcoming Christina Aguilera album, and demand for his time as a songwriter is growing. "I think people saw style over substance at the beginning [of the band's career]. But they've weathered that and have grown through the records, and what's funny is that people have partly realized it because Sam has written a global pop smash." • •

>>>YOUNG MONEY ALBUM TITLE ANNOUNCED

According to Universal Music Group's Web site, the title of the Young Money disc that will be packaged with Lil Wayne's rock album, "Rebirth" (Dec. 15), will be "We Are Young Money." Originally scheduled for April 7, the first single, "Prom Queen," was produced by Infamous and Andrew "Drew" Correa; producers Cool and Dre and Develop also have tracks on "Rebirth." Although the album is mostly rock, one of its leaked songs, "Fix My Hat," is one of the few rap tracks that the set contains.

>>>'CRAZY LOVE' GETS RERELEASE

Canadian singer Michael Bublé tells Billboard.com that he plans to reissue "Crazy Love"—which spent its first two weeks at No. 1 on the Billboard 200—next year with additional songs that he recorded during the album's sessions. Among them will be "Hollywood Dead," which will be the set's third single after "Have I Met You" and "Hold On." A release date for the album's new edition hasn't yet been announced.

>>>GERMANY BANS RAMMSTEIN ALBUM

The album "Liebe Ist Für Alle Da" by the German hard rock group Rammstein has been banned from public display in German stores due to its depictions of sadism and masochism, which have been deemed harmful to children and young people. Announcing this ruling, Petra Meier, the deputy president of the Federal Office for the Examination of Media Harmful to Young People, cited multiple tracks as well as the artwork showing guitarist Richard Kruspe with a masked, naked woman on his knees. The album may no longer be advertised or placed on open exhibition where children younger than 18 may access it.

THE CLARK SISTERS

Family Christmas

Producer: Asaph Alexander Ward

Karew Records/EMI Gospel

Release Date: Oct. 13

The Clark Sisters' new holiday album, "Family Christmas," is truly a family affair as sisters Twinkie, Karen, Jacky and Dorinda are joined by younger members of the Clark clan. Karen's son, J. Drew Sheard, penned the gorgeous track "Beautiful Christmas," which features sister and chart-topping gospel artist Kierra Sheard on lead vocals. J. Moss serves up a potent version of Donny Hathaway's "This Christmas," while his brother, Bill Moss Jr., contributes a warm take on "We Are the Reason." And the sisters deliver stellar new renditions of "Silver Bells," "Silent Night" and "Hark the Herald Angels Sing." It's been more than 30 years since the Clark Sisters issued "New Dimensions of Christmas Carols"—here's hoping they don't wait that long again to deliver another holiday gift like this glorious album.—DEP

STING

If on a Winter's Night . . .

Producers: Robert Sadin, Sting

Cherrytree/Deutsche Grammophon

Release Date: Oct. 27

Sting has said that his latest album, "If on a Winter's Night . . .," was inspired by his favorite cold-weather season. But what's surprising about the best cuts from the 15-track set is how much heat the Police frontman and his varied collaborators create. On "Christmas at Sea"—a Robert Louis Stevenson poem set to music by Sting and Scottish harpist Mary MacMaster—the players layer folky string-band licks over a percolating African-inspired groove, and "The Burning Babe"—based on a 16th-century poem by the Jesuit writer Robert Southwell—climaxes in a surprisingly fierce bit of sax-and-drums clatter by jazz veterans Kenny Garrett and Jack DeJohnette. Elsewhere, Sting recasts "The Hounds of Winter" (from his 1996 album "Mercury Falling") as a slow-mo bossa nova with percussion by Brazil's Cyro Baptista. And "Hurdy Gurdy Man" turns a bit of Schubert into a fireside lullaby.—MW

STRAIGHT NO CHASER

Christmas Cheers

Producers: Straight No Chaser, Deke Sharon

ATCO/Atlantic

Release Date: Nov. 3

The a cappella group Straight No Chaser's second holiday-themed album, "Christmas Cheers," may feature traditional songs like "We Three Kings," "O Holy Night" and "Jingle Bells," but the vocal ensemble puts its own spin on the tunes using a variety of genres to spread winter cheer. The familiar "Let It Snow" is reworked as a sassy R&B tune with a funky interlude, while the swinging "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer" features the pizzazz of big band music. Straight No Chaser loosens up from the straight-ahead approach of its first holiday album by weaving jokes in between songs and often pausing for wisecracks—a cover of "Santa Claus Is Back in Town" features a spot-on impersonation of Elvis Presley, where a group member says, "Santa's left the building, baby, he's comin' for you." "Christmas Cheers" offers a few originals, including the tongue-in-cheek title track, which references Christmas sweaters and spiked eggnog.—SG

DAVID ARCHULETA

Christmas From the Heart

Producer: Jeff Archuleta

19/Jive Records

Release Date: Oct. 13

Former "American Idol" contestant David Archuleta's new holiday album, "Christmas From the Heart," puts the singer's mellifluous voice front and center and wins over the listener with his original renditions of classic holiday music. Archuleta's velvety delivery of "Silent Night" lulls the listener into a dreamlike state, while the string arrangements on "Oh Holy Night" add to the intensity. And his Latin vocals combined with an urgent backbeat on "Pat-a-Pan" lend a more contemporary feeling to the set. Archuleta pays tribute to his Latin heritage by singing in Spanish on "Riu Riu Chiu"; elsewhere, the singer summons his usual pop style (while slipping in light sleigh bells) for "Melodies of Christmas," a song he co-wrote. Archuleta's vocal virtuosity gives "Christmas From the Heart" a timelessness that should appeal to his fans and lovers of the traditional.—KP

ANDREA BOCELLI

My Christmas

Producers: David Foster, Glen Ballard, Alan Silvestri

Sugar/Decca

Release Date: Nov. 3

It's difficult to know which of Andrea Bocelli's duet partners on his first holiday album, "My Christmas," makes for the most unlikely match with the Italian pop-classical crooner. There's Mary J. Blige, who bends the melody of "What Child Is This" into new R&B shapes. There's also Reba McEntire, next to whom Bocelli couldn't sound less down-home, in a gently swinging version of "Blue Christmas." Of course, neither of those stars usually work in children's venues, nor are they made of felt—both of which are the case with the Muppets, who show up for "Jingle Bells." (More characteristic guests on the set include Natalie Cole, Katherine Jenkins and the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.) Though there's no shortage of starchy church-service fare ("Angels We Have Heard on High," "Adeste Fideles"), much of "My Christmas" seems intended to show off Bocelli's previously disguised playfulness. That doesn't mean it's terribly playful—his version of "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town" doesn't contain a drop of wit. But isn't it nice to hear the big guy try?—MW

BOB DYLAN

Christmas in the Heart

Producer: Jack Frost

Columbia Records

Release Date: Oct. 13

Bob Dylan is so far into the creative renaissance that began with his 1997 album, "Time out of Mind," that even fans could forget his knack for taking unexpected left turns. But even by Dylan's standards, his new album "Christmas in the Heart" is an odd one—a collection of straight-ahead Christmas songs that benefits Feeding America, as well as food charities in other countries. But it will remind listeners that for nearly a decade Dylan has been working on his croon—exploring musical styles that are more polished than folk and blues. This set, which mixes holiday classics like "Here Comes Santa Claus" with lesser-known songs like "Christmas Island" and a raved-up, accordion-heavy take on "Must Be Santa," includes a breadth of styles that reminds one of Dylan's satellite radio show as much as his albums. And speaking of left turns, he sings part of "O Come All Ye Faithful" in Latin—and gets away with it.—RL

SUGARLAND

Gold and Green

Mercury

Release Date: Oct. 13

Christmas collections can present a slippery slope—albums of covers rarely stand up to the classics and sets of all new material struggle to capture the comfort and joy of the season. Thankfully, Sugarland delivers with its new holiday album, "Gold and Green," a smart and comfortable mix of standards and new songs penned by the duo's Jennifer Nettles and Kristian Bush and a few friends. Nettles' trademark growl and playfulness on "Winter Wonderland" and "Nuttin' for Christmas" are just what the December doctor ordered. Bush's lead vocal on the steel guitar-laden "Holly Jolly Christmas" beautifully blends with Nettles' intertwining reprise of "Winter Wonderland." But the proof in the pudding is the fresh yet familiar-feeling originals. The gorgeous opener, "City Of Silver Dreams" (penned with Ellis Paul), tells the tale of a town transformed, while the soulful "Coming Home" borders on a full-on gospel number complete with B-3 organ. Bush's take on "Maybe Baby (New Year's Day)" shares the modern classicism of Dan Fogelberg's "Same Old Lang Syne."—KT

A Christmas Gift for You From Phil Spector

Producer: Phil Spector

Phil Spector Records/Legacy

Release Date: Oct. 26

The first song on Phil Spector's famous Christmas album is Irving Berlin's "White Christmas," one Russian-American Jew's holiday greeting to another. But Spector's version—sung by Darlene Love and arranged with his famous Wall of Sound—gives the song a distinctly Los Angeles twist as Love sings of warm weather and palm trees. The Ronettes, the Crystals and Bob B. Soxx & the Blue Jeans help Spector reinvent classics like "Frosty the Snowman" and "Winter Wonderland" as what the producer once called "little symphonies for the kids." It was for this album that Spector, Ellie Greenwich and Jeff Barry wrote "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)," which made the holidays sound downright sexy. And the Crystals' version of "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town" inspired a similarly dramatic version by Spector fan Bruce Springsteen. Winter wonderland never got any weirder—or more grandly beautiful.—RL

Doggystyle/Priority/Capitol

At first listen, Snoop Dogg's "Gangsta Luv" appears to have all the necessary elements for a hit. Co-writer/co-producer the-Dream delivers a likable chorus, singing, "Everytime I come around, shawty love me down/Run off on me like click-clack/Throw it out like, 'Take that,' " atop keyboard licks that recall Kid Cudi's "Day N Nite." The track also continues the lady-loving theme of Snoop's 2003 hit "Beautiful," but six years later, it's the Doggfather's own lyrics that seem to fall short. While he hasn't been as lyrically inventive for some time now, the rapper sounds almost indolent on "Gangsta Luv," coasting with lines like, "I bowled up a winner, and put it up in the air/Got that lil dress on, you coming up outta there." Let's hope fans can overlook those lackluster rhymes and focus on the song's stronger, radio-friendly elements.—MC

"I want your ugly, I want your disease/I want your everything as long as it's free," a mischievous Lady Gaga croons on the opening lines of "Bad Romance." "I want your psycho, your vertigo stick/Want you in my rear window/Baby, you're sick." Hardly the stuff of a loving relationship, but according to this new track from Gaga's expanded debut album, "The Fame: Monster," no coupling is complete without a healthy dose of dysfunction. As she did on her previous No. 1 hit "Poker Face," Gaga splinters the song's title into singsongy syllables, interspersing them with "Ooh la las" over industrial-dance synths that rev up in dizzying fashion, giving an otherwise fairly simple production an illicit feel. "Bad Romance" isn't quite as catchy as the other songs from Gaga's 2009 hit streak, but it has wicked sex appeal.—MH

On Pink's biggest pop hits, art has almost always imitated life. It's no different on the title track and fourth single from her "Funhouse" album, which readdresses the singer's rocky relationship with husband Corey Hart—and thank goodness for that. Pink again displays her versatility on this complex number, which calls for blues, funk and rock vocal stylings that few other pop stars could pull off. The singer delivers with full force, colliding with lively guitar licks and hints of synth. Co-producers Jimmy Harry and No Doubt's Tony Kanal, who also co-produced Pink's previous hit, "Sober," provide a bluesy shuffle and pulsing, organ-driven bridge that drives the song home. "Funhouse" is the latest hit from Pink's most varied and compelling set since her 2001 breakthrough album, "M!ssundaztood."—MM

Chris Young's previous single, the sultry "Gettin' You Home (The Black Dress Song)," earned the Murfreesboro, Tenn., native his first No. 1 country hit, and his follow-up also has the potential to reach the summit. Penned by Brett James and Tim Nichols, "The Man I Want to Be" is a thoughtful ballad written from the perspective of a man who knows he's made mistakes, as Young sings, "I want to be a good man/A do-like-I-should man/The kind of man the mirror likes to see." Young has a rich, resonant voice and delivers a potent vocal that is emotional, yet restrained. It's a remarkably seasoned performance by a young talent who has the vocal chops and sensibility to follow in the footsteps of his hero, Keith Whitley. Yes, that's high praise, but Young has earned it.—DEP

With the 2010 FIFA World Cup in South Africa around the corner, Daddy Yankee aims to score the kind of goal Ricky Martin did with his 1998 hit, "The Cup of Life." Yankee's "Grito Mundial"—in Spanish, the title can mean "Worldwide Shout" or "World Cup Shout"—opens with carnivalesque fanfare, matching rowdy chants to a dance beat that could bring a stadium's worth of soccer diehards to their feet. Fans are pushing for this first single from the Puerto Rican artist's upcoming album, "Daddy Yankee Mundial," to be used as the official World Cup anthem. With so many samba whistles, "Grito" could easily be dedicated to Brazil, but Yankee's self-penned lyrics call for unity among all Latin American countries. It's another potential radio hit with plenty of gasolina.—JCN

Steven Curtis Chapman Comes Back With Album Following Daughter's Tragic Death

Steven Curtis Chapman wishes he had never written the songs on his new album, "Beauty Will Rise" (Sparrow Records/EMI, Nov. 3), which debuts this week at No. 1 on Billboard's Top Christian Albums chart. That's because the songs were written following the death of his 5-year-old daughter Maria, who was killed May 21, 2008, when Chapman's 17-year-old son accidentally hit her while pulling into the family's driveway in a sport utility vehicle.

"The last thing I wanted was to turn any of this into a song," Chapman says. "After we lost Maria, I did not know if I would ever write anymore songs or ever sing again."

His songwriting, however, became a cathartic experience. "You realize, 'God, this is what happened and now what would you have me do? How would beauty come out of this and what would that look like?' " Chapman says of the questions he asked as he wrestled with his faith. "Songs slowly began to come out as I tried to process what my family and I were thinking and feeling."

Chapman—the Christian music industry's most-awarded artist with more than 50 Dove Awards and five Grammys to his credit—wasn't signed to a label when he recorded "Beauty Will Rise." The singer/songwriter, who has recorded with Sparrow for more than two decades, decided at the time that if he signed another record deal, it would be after he finished recording this project. "If there was ever a recording I was going to make that I could not let anyone speak to me abou the process, this was it. For better or worse, it just had to com straight out of my gut."

Chapman recruited Brent Milligan as his co-produce More than half of the album was recorded in dressing room and hotels during Chapman's United tour with Michael W Smith. "We would set up a little makeshift studio and record, Chapman says. And although several labels were vying t release "Beauty," he returned to the familiarity of the Spar row team.

"People will find encouragement and hope in this albun regardless of their life situation," says David Sylvester, prod uct marketing director for EMI Christian Music Group. Th label hosted a release-date webcast from Chapman's hom studio as well as a webcast for Christian radio. "Over 40 sta tions signed up to watch and about a third of them watche with their entire staff," Sylvester says.

Christian retail has also supported the project. "Famil Christian Stores and Lifeway both worked to deliver sig nificant positioning even though we were right up agains their deadlines," Sylvester says. "Family Christian imple mented a presell in all their stores, with consumers imme diately receiving a CD single of [the lead single] 'Heave Is the Face.' "

While "Beauty" is a very personal project, it also strikes universal chord. The lyrics are honest and vulnerable, espe cially on songs like "Heaven Is the Face"—No. 16 on the Hc Christian Songs chart—and "Questions," on which Chap man asks, "Who are you God?/Cause you are turning out t be so much different than I imagined." Yet hope reverberate as well on other tunes like "Spring Is Coming," "Our God I in Control" and "I Will Trust You."

As evidenced by those songs, Chapman's faith remain strong. "The hope that we have has allowed me to share thi music and this recording with people," he says. " 'Beauty will always be the album that I wished I would have neve written. But part of the process in doing this is to see Go bring beauty out of the ashes and see the comfort in othe people that can come from this." ...

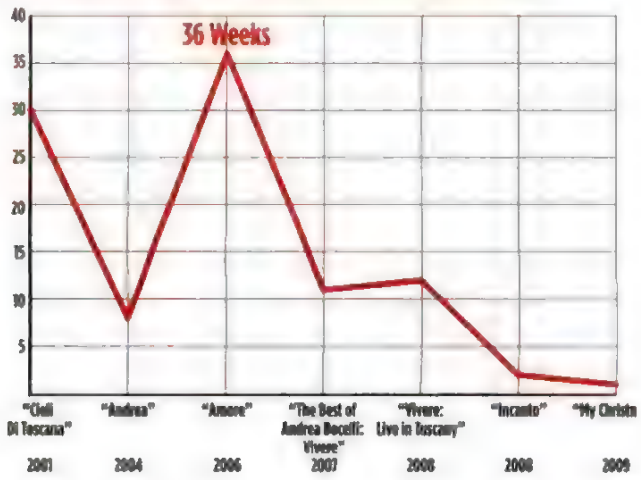
'TIS BOCELLI SEASON



Andrea Bocelli's "My Christmas" debuts on the Billboard 200 at No. 3 with 149,000 copies sold, ac cording to Nielsen SoundScan. It is the Italian singer's fifth top 10 release and his best sales wee since "Cieli Di Toscana" sold 177,000 during Christmas week in 2001.¶ The new album's sales tota is also Bocelli's second-best opening week—the 1999 "Songo" sold just a couple of hundred mor copies in its first week. "My Christmas" begins at No. 1 on both Top Holiday Albums and Top Clas sical Crossover Albums.¶ The latter tally gives Bocelli a record seventh chart-topper. He was prev ously tied for most No. 1s in the 16-year history of the chart with John Williams, Sarah Brightma and the London Symphony Orchestra. And the arrival of "Christmas" atop the Classical Crossove chart is the artist's 100th cumulative week at No. 1 (see chart).¶ The David Foster-produced albur primarily features English recordings of seasonal songs like "White Christmas," "Santa Claus I Coming to Town" and "Silent Night." Bocelli is joined by guests including Natalie Cole, Reba McEr tire, Mary J. Blige and the Muppets.

Are Awards In Synch With Consumer Desires?

Ednita Nazario Continues At No. 1 As Latin Grammys Help Post Gains For Others

Following the recent 10th annual Latin Grammy Awards in Las Vegas, veteran Puerto Rican artist Ednita Nazario continues her reign at No. 1 on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart for a second consecutive week with "Soy" (Sony, Oct. 27). Sales of the album (23,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan), primarily from Puerto Rico, nearly doubled those of this week's No. 2 album, Aventura's "The Last." That Sony album has already spent 22 weeks on or near the top of the Latin Albums chart.

But looking beyond the top echelon, an important part of the Latin sales chart movement this week is related to the Latin Grammy Awards—but not always in obvious ways.

In terms of percentages, the Latin Grammys resulted in some of the biggest across-the-board increases in album sales for the weekend following the Nov. 5 telecast. But in terms of copies sold, the results were more modest—befitting the times—with not a single artist selling more than 1,000 copies from the previous week. This also illustrates how awards aren't always in synch with consumer sentiment.

The biggest percentage gainer this week is the Puerto Rican duo Calle 13, which won five Latin Grammys and posted a 134% sales increase. But the unit sales gain was minuscule. The pair's album, "Los de Atras Vienen Conmigo" (Sony), barely re-entered the chart at No. 74, despite a high-power performance alongside Ruben Blades and members of Cirque du Soleil.

The biggest gainer in terms of sales was Person of the Year honoree Juan Gabriel. His 30-plus-minute performance—unheard of on a Latin music awards show—resulted in an 88% gain and the biggest rise in copies sold—close to 1,000—for his hits album "Mis Canciones" (Discos 605/Sony).

Still No. 1: EDNITA NAZARIO

Next up behind Calle 13 in terms of percentage hikes is Wisin & Yandel, who saw an 81% increase in sales for their album "La Revolucion" (Machete/Universal). Luis Fonsi received an 80.4% boost for "Palabras del Silencio" (Universal Music Latino), which climbed from No. 19 to No. 14 after 63 weeks on the chart. Other gainers include Luis Enrique's "Ciclos" (Top Spot), which jumped 39-21 on an 89% increase in sales but sold fewer copies than Fonsi, and Laura Pausini's "Primavera Anticipada" (Warner), which rose 26-17 on a 55% increase in copies sold.

Surprise best pop duo or group winner Reik nearly doubled its album sales as "Un Dia Mas" entered the chart at No. 30. But as with Calle 13, Reik's unit gain was very small.

In all fairness, expecting substantial increases at a time when Latin music sales have taken a major beating is unrealistic. Plus, Latin music awards shows never deliver the kind of sales gain like that of mainstream awards programs. In terms of ratings, however, the Latin Grammys posted higher numbers than last year. This year's show had a 25.4 rating among Hispanic viewers, according to Nielsen; was watched by an average of 5.8 million viewers; and finished as the most-watched show on Spanish-language TV for the week that ended Nov. 8. In that context, the sales results are very disappointing. And it again underscores the fact that what people like to watch on TV and what they actually buy can be two different things. ••••

WAYNE'S WORLD

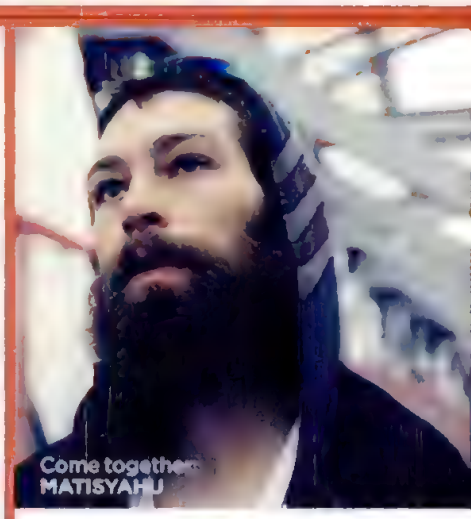
Delayed by a lawsuit, the Lil Wayne documentary "The Carter" will now come out on DVD Nov. 17 in the United States. Produced by Quincy "QD3" Jones III and directed by Adam Lough, the 90-minute film is currently the focus of a presale and in-sale promotion in partnership with LimeWire.

"The Carter" offers an engaging, fascinating and sometimes humorous look at one of music's most popular artists. Filmed seven months before and a couple of months after the momentous release of Lil Wayne's 2008 platinum-selling "Tha Carter III," the documentary follows the rapper and his entourage on- and offstage in locales like Amsterdam, New York and Los Angeles.

Yes, blunts and cough syrup are in evidence. But more compelling is the man behind the star persona and the creative force that drives him. As he notes about growing up: "I didn't want to play hide and seek. I watched 'Star Search' and 'Showtime at the Apollo.' " Offering personal perspectives are manager Cortez Bryant, Cash Money principal Brian "Baby" Williams and Wayne's daughter, Reginae Carter.

"Like James Brown, this guy works 100 times harder," says Jones, who operates Digerati Holdings (which contracted with Wayne and Young Money to do the film) and QD3 Entertainment. "He's obsessed about excelling as a lyricist and recording more songs." Lough adds, "Beyond the media hype, I hope viewers will realize how much of a genius Lil Wayne is."

Premiering last January at the Sundance Film Festival, the documentary's wide release was delayed when Wayne filed suit in March for breach of contract regarding the final edit of the project. The court rejected the claim after Digerati filed a countersuit. Although Jones' company was given the right to release the film, appeals filed by both parties are still pending. Wayne also faces jail time in 2010 after pleading guilty to a charge of attempted criminal possession of a weapon.



In the meantime, self-described "super tech geek" Jones is mounting a major viral campaign around the DVD. In a marketing first for LimeWire, the portal is hosting a pre-order campaign and special giveaway promotion. LimeWire CEO George Searle says, "It's no secret that we'd like to work with the entire music industry." Rounding out the film's digital push are Twitter contests for free screening passes, a Web site (thecarterdoc.com) and iTunes as well as YouTube and MySpace.

Jones says, "We wanted to do this film five years ago but the distributor didn't understand the Lil Wayne movement. We were lucky this time; we caught a special window in his life and career."

OLYMPIC DREAMS

Apart from the gold, silver and bronze medals, the Olympics are about bringing together various countries and cultures. As an artist who merges Hasidic Judaism with reggae beats—plus hip-hop and rock—Matisyahu can definitely relate. The artist's uplifting anthem, "One Day," has been tapped as the theme song for NBC's "Countdown to Vancouver" promotional campaign for the 2010 Winter Olympics (Feb. 12-28).

"One Day" is the lead single from Matisyahu's third album, "Light," released in August. The Epic artist describes the song as being about "unity and coming together for one common cause; about putting aside all differences and issues to connect in some way."

The spot premiered Nov. 3, ran all day Nov. 4 on all of NBC's affiliated cable networks, including Bravo, Oxygen, MSNBC and USA, and will air on NBC through February. It features Vancouver contenders Apolo Ohno (speed skating), Lindsey Vonn (alpine skiing), Shaun White (snowboarding), Gretchen Bleiler (snowboarding) and Tanith Belbin and Ben Agosto (figure skating) describing what the Olympics mean to athletes and spectators alike. Matisyahu says, "When you see what those athletes go through and being the background for that . . . it pulls on the heartstrings."

For the week that ended Nov. 8, "One Day" experienced a 13% increase in download sales—its first weekly increase since the beginning of October. To date, the song has sold 117,000 downloads, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In keeping with his cross-genre style, Matisyahu says fans can expect a new version of "One Day" featuring Akon to premiere in the next few weeks.

In the meantime, Matisyahu is touring in support of "Light," working with Kenneth Cole on the "One Day for Change" viral campaign on Twitter and participating in a Charity Folks online auction—the prize being a Brooklyn bike ride with the artist. Matisyahu is also finalizing details for his fourth annual Festival of Light in New York during Hanukkah, which begins Dec. 11. —Kelly Staskel

Carrie's Big 'Play'; Chart Changes On The Horizon

Carrie Underwood's "Play On" bows at No. 1 on the Billboard 200, selling 318,000 copies in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

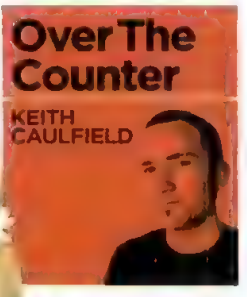
The country artist's album is her second to top the tally, after her second set, "Carnival Ride," bowed in the penthouse with 527,000 in 2007. Her 2005 debut, "Some Hearts," started at No. 2 on the Billboard 200 and at No. 1 on Top Country Albums with 315,000.

She is only the fourth artist since Billboard's sales charts began using SoundScan data in 1991 to bow at No. 1 on Top Country Albums with their first three chart entries. LeAnn Rimes, Gretchen Wilson and Miranda Lambert also managed the feat.

The 318,000 sum for "Play On" is the largest sales week for a female artist's album in 2009 and the year's second-best frame for a country release. Among this year's country sets, only Rascal Flatts' "Unstoppable" netted a bigger week, when it started at No. 1 with 351,000 sold.

Underwood joins an elite group of artists whose first three studio albums all debuted with more than 300,000 copies in the SoundScan era.

Aside from her, only Snoop Dogg, 50 Cent, Beyoncé and Kanye West have achieved that feat, and West did it with his first four studio albums.



By earning her second No. 1 on the Billboard 200, Underwood becomes only the sixth female country artist to do so. Before Underwood, only Rimes, Olivia Newton-John, Linda Ronstadt, Faith Hill and Reba McEntire had roped a pair of toppers on the Billboard 200.

Newton-John earned her No. 1s in 1974—when she was considered a country artist—with "If You Love Me, Let Me Know" and "Have You Never Been Mellow." Ronstadt notched a trio of chart-toppers between 1975 and 1978 with "Heart Like a Wheel," "Simple Dreams" and "Living in the U.S.A"—all of which also charted on Top Country Albums.

CH-CH-CHANGES: Beginning with the Dec. 5 issue of Billboard (which will report the sales tracking week of Nov. 16-22), the Billboard 200 will be based on Nielsen SoundScan's Comprehensive Albums chart instead of the Current Albums chart. With this change, the Billboard 200 will now rank the top overall selling albums in the country, regardless of their release date (see story, page 6).

The change in the Billboard 200 will not affect SoundScan's own presentation of the charts or its calculations of marketing reports, as the Top Current Albums, Top Comprehensive Albums and Top Catalog Albums charts remain unchanged.

The only change is which of those charts make up the basis of the Billboard 200 rankings. In addition, the move to a current/catalog hybrid chart will only affect the Billboard 200. All of our other currents-based albums charts will still abide by our longstanding catalog criteria.

Some may ask, why didn't this happen sooner? A change as significant as this required much discussion and consultation. In addition, Billboard's new 2010 chart year was an appropriate time to make the change.

If you have any questions regarding the change to the Billboard 200 or the alterations to the R&B/Hip-Hop Albums chart (see story, page 6), contact director of charts Silvio Pietroluongo at silvio@billboard.com.

FOR THE RECORD: On Thursday, Nov. 5, Nielsen SoundScan reprocessed its digital songs and tracks charts after receiving revised data from a digital provider. However, this revision came after the Billboard pages that house the Hot Digital Songs chart and the Billboard Hot 100 were shipped to our printer. On Nov. 6, the online versions of these charts were corrected to reflect the revised data, as were the charts-based stories on billboard.com and billboard.biz. In this week's issue, the charts' "last week" column shows the corrected ranking.

Due to an editing error, last week's column should have reported that Michael Jackson's "This Is It" had the fifth-best sales frame of any one album in 2009, not the fifth-best debut week. • •

Even though 13 of the 16 songs on this album were released as digital tracks before the CD reached stores (1.6 million downloads sold), the set still sells 113,000 in its first week.

11

It's an embarrassment of riches on this collection, where all but one song was a top 10 single on the Alternative chart. The set's lead single, "Wheels," is one of two new tracks and bullets at No. 3 on the Alternative tally.

42

A new CD/DVD version of the set (exclusive to Best Buy) bowed last week. In turn, the album notches a 490% gain, earning its best sales week (13,000 sold) since July.

44

This singer's music video for "History In the Making" premiered last week in the iTunes store, where his album was sold for $7.99. It's up 64% this week.

90

This vocal ensemble returns with its second holiday set in as many years (7,000 sold). It also arrives at No. 11 on Top Holiday Albums (see page 36).

The "Now" series nets its 52nd and 53rd charting albums this week with the bow of "Now 32" at No. 5 and this dance effort, which includes rhythmic-leaning dance cuts like Jody Watley's "Real Love," Paula Abdul's "Straight Up" and Young MC's "Bust a Move."

116

This debut returns the Bee Gees to the Warner family on the Billboard 200 for the first time since 1989. The act obtained the rights to its catalog in 2006 from Universal and now licenses its recordings to Reprise/Warner.

130

This album, which also arrives at No. 9 on Top Soundtracks, boasts the unreleased Bob Dylan song "California." The track was prominently featured in the Nov. 3 episode of the CBS TV show.

169

The album's 20% sales increase was at least partially owed to her Nov. 8 guest turn on ABC's "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition."

176

This compilation (3,000 sold), which mostly features tunes voiced by Mickey and his animated pals, is exclusively sold through Target and iTunes and carries a list price of $6.99.

#1

The Canadian singer's U.S. debut album starts with 6,000 copies sold. Its first single, "Little Bit of Red," peaked at No. 6 on the Triple A radio chart in June.

Judas Priest's Rob Halford wishes fans a happy holiday with this set, which just misses charting on the Top Holiday Albums tally this week.

The 92-year-old, World War II-era singer's album, which hit No. 1 in the United Kingdom, gives Lynn her first charting album in the United States.

The Sean Kingston protege moves into the top 10 as the chart's top digital gainer. The track jumps 10-2 on Hot Digital Songs (154,000, up 37%).

The rising superstar earns her first No. 1 on Hot 100 Airplay, as "Paparazzi" [illegible] previously climbed as high as No. 2 with "Poker Face."

The title makes the chart's biggest jump, while rising 16-11 on Rock Songs. The band is one of eight acts remaining on the Fuse network's Best of 2009 fan-voted competition and is battling Papa Roach for the right to move on to the final four.

93

The song is his eighth top 10 on Adult Top 40 (9-9), one shy of John Mayer's mark among male artists. If we add Thomas' top 10 count with Matchbox Twenty (12), it would appropriately bring his total to 20.

99

The series' cast ties Taylor Swift for second-most Billboard Hot 100 entries this year (14), as this "Wicked" cover bows. Lil Wayne is the overall leader with 19 appearances in 2009.

'ROULETTE' LANDS IN TOP 10

Rihanna earns her 12th Billboard Hot 100 top 10 as "Russian Roulette" shoots 75-9, triggered by first-week download sales of 132,000. "Roulette" opens at No. 9 on Hot Digital Songs and inches 36-35 on Hot 100 Airplay with 29.4 million audience impressions. The song's digital release coincided with the singer's first public comments since her assault in February in an interview on ABC's "20/20" and "Good Morning America" (Nov. 5 and 6). Rihanna's 12 Hot 100 top 10s place her second among female acts this decade, trailing only Beyonce's 13 top 10s. "Roulette" previews Rihanna's new album, "Rated R," due Nov. 23. Silvio Pietroluongo

Owl City, the group helmed by singer/songwriter Adam Young, becomes the first lead act in almost three years to claim the Adult Top 40 Greatest Gainer award with a debut chart single for four consecutive weeks, as "Fireflies" rises 17-12 (up 451 plays, a 32% increase). Daughtry's "It's Not Over" earned the honor for four straight weeks in January and February 2007.

On the Billboard 200, Owl City's "Ocean Eyes" registers its highest weekly sales total (32,000 sold, up 24%) and rebounds 19-18 after reaching its current peak of No. 8 two weeks ago. On the Billboard Hot 100, "Fireflies" rebounds 2-1 for a second week at the summit.

The Black Eyed Peas' "Meet Me Halfway" climbs 12-10 on Mainstream Top 40 (where "Fireflies" rises 10-8), putting the band into a tie with Destiny's Child for most top 10s (eight) among groups this decade.

CARRIE'S FAST RIDE

As her new album hits Billboard's retail charts (see Over the Counter, page 33), Carrie Underwood makes her fastest rise to the summit on Hot Country Songs with her eighth No. 1, the most by any solo female this decade. Up 3.4 million impressions in its 10th chart week, "Cowboy Casanova" also posts the fastest No. 1 run since June, when Brad Paisley's "Then" needed 10 weeks to reach the top. Among solo females in the Nielsen BDS era (since January 1990), Underwood is second to Faith Hill and Reba McEntire, who have nine apiece, while Shania Twain has seven, Jo Dee Messina six and Martina McBride five. — Wade Jessen

Alicia Keys now has more No. 1s on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop than any other female artist, as Jay-Z's "Empire State of Mind," on which she guests, rises 3-1 and becomes her sixth. Tied for second place, with five No. 1s apiece, are Beyoncé, Mariah Carey, Keyshia Cole and Monica.

AMERIE, RYAN LESLIE START HIGH

Amerie returns from a four-year hiatus as "In Love & War" debuts at No. 3 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, marking her third consecutive top three entry. While able to maintain her streak on this chart, Amerie's top 10 run on the Billboard 200 ends as "Love" bows at No. 46 with 13,000 sold. Previous releases "All I Have" (2002) and "Touch" (2005) debuted in the top 10 with 89,000 and 124,000 copies sold, respectively. "Love" is on its third single, "Pretty Brown," which dips 78-88 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs.

Ryan Leslie makes a quicker return between albums as his second set, "Transition," enters at No. 4 on Top R&B/Hip-Hip Albums and No. 50 on the Billboard 200. With 24,000 copies sold, his self-titled debut opened at Nos. 9 and 35, respectively, in February.

Featured on this track, Lil Wayne ties Mariah Carey and Mary J. Blige for fourth-most top 10s (19) since the Nielsen BDS and SoundScan era began in December 1992.

The ballad rises 12-9 on Adult R&B, where it is Jackson's fifth top 10 and first since "Butterflies" spent five weeks at No. 1 in 2002.

R&B/hip-hop radio is more accepting of the second single from "Rated R," which bests the No. 62 bow of "Russian Roulette" (49-56) as Rihanna's highest solo debut on which she's the sole lead artist.

The singer's fans may be surprised that this track is homed on a year-old reggae compilation released by VP Records and not her debut album, which is available as of this week at brick-and-mortar retailers. Her set had been exclusive to iTunes since last month.

Timbaland primes "Shock Value II" with this cut featuring Drake. Due Dec. 8, the album also boasts appearances by Justin Timberlake, Nelly Furtado, Katy Perry and Miley Cyrus.

JAY-Z HITS HOME WITH 'EMPIRE'

Fueled by airplay that followed the World Series' Nov. 4 finale, Jay-Z's "Empire State of Mind" becomes his eighth No. 1 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs and the tally's 200th chart-topper since the chart began using Nielsen SoundScan data on Dec. 5, 1992. The track, which became the New York Yankees' theme song during the Series, gathered 6.2 million impressions the day after the team's victory, an increase of more than 1 million from the day before. It trailed Usher's "Papers" in the days that followed but the surge was enough for the track to reach the summit when the chart period ended. The track extends Jay-Z's lead for the most No. 1s by a rapper. —Raphael George

2009 BILLBOARD TOURING CONFERENCE AND AWARDS

The sixth annual Billboard Touring Conference and Awards, the premiere gathering for the concert industry, took place Nov. 4-5 at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York. The two-day event featured panels, discussions, networking opportunities and an awards reception that targeted promoters, agents, managers, venues, sponsors and production professionals. The conference put up record attendance numbers this year, drawing registrants from all segments of the industry for discussions on the most critical issues facing the live entertainment business. The 2009 Billboard Touring Awards are based on worldwide data reported to Billboard Boxscore for the period of Oct. 1, 2008, through Sept. 30, 2009. Madonna's Sticky & Sweet tour was the big winner, picking home honors for top tour and top draw; Madonna's manager Guy Oseary won the top manager award. Other winners include Kenny Chesney's Sun City Carnival tour (which was the fifth straight time that Chesney won for top package), Il Divo (the breakthrough award) and U2 (top boxscore for the band's shows at Croke Park in Dublin last July). Vans Warped tour founder Kevin Lyman received the Humanitarian Award, and Ozzy Osbourne was named Legend of Live. The event was sponsored by Eventful, Ticketmaster, Verizon Arena, Ford Center, Mozes, Pioneer Coach, Wells Fargo Theatre and Time Warner Cable Arena, among others. PANIC PLANS NEW ALBUM

A relatively light year of touring for Widespread Panic has let the band concentrate on a new album to follow up the 2008 "Free Somehow."

Bassist Dave Schools reports that the group "convened at our home studio in Athens, Ga.," this year, returning to producer John Keane for the first time since the 2003 "Ball" to work on fresh material. "We committed about six or seven ideas to tape, as the whole band, to start working on it, and I know there are a lot more in the hopper," Schools says. "They're not songs yet. Some have shown up as worked-out instrumentals and melodies. Words haven't found their way in yet. The stage we're at now is developing those things."

The band plans to return to the studio in January to continue working the ideas into songs, and Schools predicts that an album could be out "some time before summertime, maybe late spring." Meanwhile, he expects the group to refine those ideas a bit while it's on the road this fall.

"I wouldn't be surprised if some of those ideas work their way into jams," Schools says, "maybe make an appearance as actual songs if we get them together. That's kind of the way we do things."

Under The Influence

Online Access To Music Can Help Fuel Creativity And Innovation

BY STEVE PURDHAM

For years, the debate over the Internet's impact on the music industry has centered on piracy, which has put a sizable dent in the wallets of artists and labels alike.

But Duran Duran bassist John Taylor recently shifted the discussion to a new area, arguing that the Web is hurting artistic creativity.

In a speech delivered at UCLA in October, Taylor asserted that online platforms like YouTube and Twitter were ruining music, suggesting that the unprecedented access to musical influences stretching back decades is having a negative impact on the creativity of modern-day artists.

By being influenced by music from the past, Taylor seemed to argue, aspiring musicians will dilute innovation. He also maintained that consumers, able to hear the music of their heroes at any opportunity, will quickly tire of it—negatively affecting the longevity of music.

All of this is patently untrue and quite the opposite to what we are trying to achieve at we7, a streaming music service that provides consumers with legal access to millions of tracks.

Modern-day music is a patchwork of influences from previous genres. Such tracks as Procol Harum's "Whiter Shade of Pale" demonstrate this explicitly. The track has an organ line influenced by Johann Sebastian Bach. Far from undermining the power of the piece, the Bach-influenced organ line made the song one of the enduring musical classics of the '60s. Similarly, the Last Shadow Puppets, a side project of Arctic Monkeys frontman Alex Turner, released a debut album last year that referenced the music of '60s stars Scott Walker and David Bowie and was met with critical acclaim.

The online arena is a vital stepping-stone for any artist trying to find an audience. Scottish singer/songwriter Sandi Thom famously drew thousands of online fans to concerts streamed from her kitchen, which led to a record deal with RCA and an international No. 1 hit, "I Wish I Was a Punk Rocker (With Flowers in My Hair)."

Similarly, Lily Allen started with a MySpace profile and an audience of tens of thousands before she signed with EMI imprint Regal Recordings and produced two hit albums and a slew of top-ranking singles. Without the channels now afforded to unsigned artists, would these two have made it? Possibly, but it's far from being a likelihood.

Innovation isn't stifled by access to music. If anything, great new music often emerges from the ashes of previous musical movements. Punk was a direct reaction to the music that preceded it, in the same way that Brit pop paid homage to the songs of the '60s and '70s. The suggestion that consumers become tired of their favorite artists through overexposure can easily be challenged by looking at the recent U.K. download and we7 streaming charts, where long-established acts like Fleetwood Mac, Journey and Shirley Bassey all made an appearance.

In terms of the dues owed to online music by established artists, there's now an argument that the reason there are such premiums for tour tickets, long after an act's records have gone out of production and the original fans have developed families and expanding waistlines, is because their music remains relevant and accessible through online channels. U.K. music festivals are now awash with veterans of the '60s and '70s, because music fans in their teens and 20s are not only aware of Neil Young, Bruce Springsteen and Tom Jones but have downloaded their music and know the words too. It's a situation that was unthinkable a decade ago.

A key factor in the latter-day relevance of new acts is the ability to find, discover and share music online. When a fan discovers the original recording of Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah," it's a personal revelation. When that fan can share it across social networks and on his or her blog, it can be the catalyst for a revolution. Streaming is increasingly used as a means to preview tracks, letting consumers sample and explore a wide variety of music—which can only be a positive for all artists, especially those not promoted through mainstream channels.

Ultimately, music couldn't evolve without artists having access to new influences and audiences. Our aim is to provide sustainable access to every great track demanded by consumers. ...

Steve Purdham is co-founder/CEO of U.K. music streaming service we7.

FACE THE MUSIC

EMI's Fate Hangs In The Balance As Owner Terra Firma Tries To Address Debt

Terra Firma's recent offer to inject £1 billion ($1.7 billion) into EMI Group was a bold move by the U.K. private-equity firm to shore up its investment in the struggling major label.

But the outcome of this latest maneuver could be that the firm shares ownership of EMI with creditor Citigroup or is forced out altogether. And that, in turn, could have implications for a prospective and long-speculated tie-up with Warner Music Group (WMG).

Neither Terra Firma nor Citigroup would confirm media reports that the former's offer was made in hopes that Citigroup would forgive a commensurate portion of Terra Firma's £2.7 billion ($4.5 billion) loan to buy EMI.

Of course, Citigroup isn't about to forgive any debt, because the Terra Firma cash injection wouldn't give it any more upside than it has now.

Right now, it's out £2.7 billion, and even if an equity injection by Terra Firma could eliminate EMI's worries, all it would do for Citigroup is push off those worries until 2015. That's when EMI balloon payments come due on Terra Firma's two term loans: £1.5 billion ($2.5 billion) for the bridge loan since converted into a term loan against EMI's healthy music publishing business and £1.1 billion ($1.8 billion) for the term loan against recorded music and music publishing, according to Terra Firma's financial report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2008.

So what was Terra Firma chairman Guy Hands thinking? Hands may be banking on the fact that Citigroup has almost certainly already written down the value of the EMI loan and that it was a recipient of the U.S. government's Troubled Asset Relief Program bailout money.

The only way Citigroup is likely to forgive any of Terra Firma's debt is if it gets equity in EMI. In fact, Citigroup did such a deal earlier this year with Source Interlink, the parent of music wholesaler Alliance Entertainment. After Source Interlink filed for a prepackaged Chapter 11 bankruptcy earlier this year, its equity owners were forced out and replaced by a banking consortium led by Citigroup and J.P. Morgan, which agreed to covert nearly $1 billion in debt into equity, leaving the wholesaler with a much cleaner balance sheet and much lower interest payments.

Could the same scenario play out between Terra Firma and Citigroup? If the two sides were to hold talks on a debt-for-equity swap, Terra Firma would try to keep as much equity as possible, while Citigroup would likely push for a Source Interlink-like conclusion. Since the debt is divided almost equally between recorded-music and publishing assets, the talks also could center on whether Citigroup gets control of one of the assets in exchange for a debt-to-equity swap.

An alternative scenario is that the two sides begin playing a waiting game. Citigroup might simply sit back to see if Terra Firma defaults on its loans, while Terra Firma banks on revived revenue growth at EMI and an improved global economy with more abundant credit that would allow for a more favorable environment for restructuring debt.

But if it is a waiting game, Citigroup may have to make itself comfortable. EMI officials are privately saying that the company's performance is improving. EMI Group's earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization grew to more than £200 million ($333.3 million) during the fiscal year ended March 31, up from EBITDA of £163 million ($271.6 million) in the previous fiscal year.

Moreover, while Terra Firma has had to periodically inject equity into EMI to remain compliant with its covenant-light loans, sources suggest EMI's recently improved performance thanks to cost cutting and recorded-music sales buoyed by the label's reissue of the Beatles catalog has negated the need for additional equity in this quarter or the next.

What does all of this mean for a potential merger between EMI and WMG? Until WMG pays off its nearly $2 billion in debt or unless EMI's debt issues are resolved, the deal won't happen.

WMG recently issued nearly $1.1 million in notes, due June 15, 2016, to replace bank debt, which give the major more flexibility with less onerous financial covenants on its loans. But it still leaves the company with the same amount of debt.

Nonetheless, if EMI's debt is eliminated through a Citigroup takeover, the label could remain independent or consider a merger with WMG. Warner would have the inside track on any pairing with EMI because the two larger majors, Universal Music Group and Sony Music Entertainment, would face tough antitrust questions if they tried to acquire EMI. WMG, which says it declines to comment on rumor or speculation, would also have an advantage over other potential non-major-label EMI bidders because it could gain the most economies of scale by doing the deal.

Key Themes From The Media And Money Conference

More than 'Idol' chatter: KARA DioGUARDI at the Media and Money Conference; inset: Vevo president/CEO RIO CARAEFF

Top media executives and decision-makers gathered to share their thoughts on the challenges facing the industry at the third annual Media and Money Conference presented by Nielsen and Dow Jones, which was held Nov. 12-13 at New York's Roosevelt Hotel. (See Backbeat, page 58.)

WHAT'S NEXT FOR ONLINE CONTENT

The first wave of Internet development focused on access, then platforms ranging from Facebook to iTunes, observed AOL chairman/CEO Tim Armstrong. The Web's next focus, he said, will concern content.

Web video and social media will be key elements of those efforts, Armstrong said, noting that "we see social as a great way to distribute content."

Asked about advertising sales strategies surrounding content, he said AOL likes bundling audience segments together across various Web sites. "Building niche properties is valuable," he said.

Online video content needs to be more engaging and offer less of a passive viewing experience, said Rio Caraeff, president/CEO of Vevo, the YouTube-powered online music video joint venture between Universal Music Group and Sony Music Entertainment.

"What Vevo is trying to do is to improve the quality of the experience, create more engagement and more interactive features in and around music videos, and build a new distribution model," Caraeff said.

GETTING CONSUMERS TO PAY FOR CONTENT

"We can't survive as a media industry if everything gets down to free," warned Herb Scannell, executive chairman/co-founder of Next New Networks.

Among those trying to create paid-content models is Steve Brill, co-founder of Journalism Online, which is assisting publishers in devising ways to charge readers for online content.

Once more consumers start paying, advertisers will follow, Brill predicted, reasoning that advertisers are willing to pay more for paying users than free users.

Time Inc. Digital president Kirk McDonald said that charging will become easier as "consumers realize you need a certain amount of authority to create that lean-back content."

MORE MEDIA M&A TO COME?

As cable giant Comcast nears a deal to acquire NBC Universal, News Corp. president/COO Chase Carey said he doesn't think it will spur "a hot period" of mergers and acquisitions in the media industry.

Carey said that after media companies endured "a challenging time," there has been "a little bit of pent-up activity." But he said he viewed other recent media deals, such as Disney's purchase of Marvel, as transactions "driven by unique events," not the beginning of new media M&A boom.

The most troubled companies at the moment? Radio, newspapers and local TV stations—all hav experienced plummeting advertising and have y to see their digital initiatives pay off, according Royce Yudkoff, co-founder/president of ABRY Par ners, a private-equity firm that specializes in med and communications investments.

Yudkoff said areas of interest to investors at th moment are non-advertising-dependent companie such as information and data distributors.

CREATIVES NEED BIZ GROUNDING TO

Although best-known as a judge on "Amer can Idol," Kara DioGuardi is also a hitma ing songwriter, an A&R executive Warner Bros. Records and the co-owne co-founder of the music publishing cor pany Arthouse Entertainment.

In a keynote interview with Billboard ec torial director Bill Werde, DioGuardi explain how gaining an understanding of entertainment i dustry economics, such as the value of owning cop rights and running your own business, has help her career.

Working at Billboard from 1993 to 1998 help acquaint her with the music business before goi out on her own, she said. "I was educated about whe revenue streams came from. Eventually I bet on m self and I knew, unlike many artists who can't p the rent, I'd make a living."

While DioGuardi kept her publishing, she st had to share money with co-songwriters and pr ducers, even though she was the one getting the the work. "I thought to myself, 'This is silly,' " s said. So she launched Arthouse as an investme and to nurture young writers.

DioGuardi eventually sold a minority intere in Arthouse to Bug Music, which gave her a pa ner with deep pockets and expertise in admin tering copyrights.

Despite the industry's recent challenges, mus is still in demand and publishing is the core of t industry, DioGuardi said, noting, "It's always abo the great songs."

LATIN MUSIC CONFERENCE HEADS TO PUERTO RICO

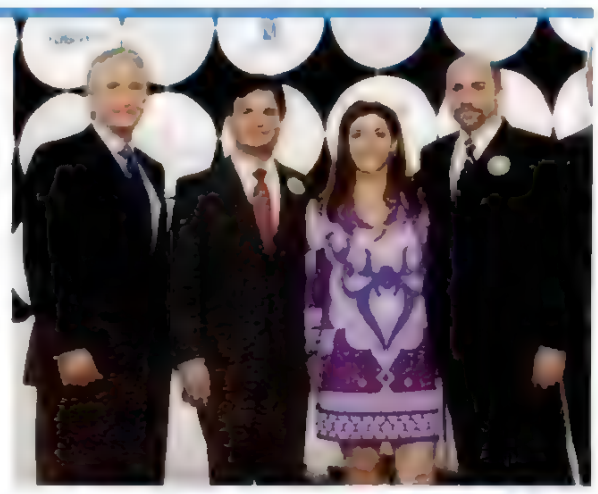
The 2010 Billboard Latin Music Conference & Awards will take place in San Juan, Puerto Rico, marking the first time that the two events will be held outside the continental United States.

The 21st annual awards show, presented by State Farm, will be broadcast live April 29 by NBC Universal's Telemundo network. The show will take place at the new, state-of-the-art Coliseo de Puerto Rico, under an agreement involving Telemundo, Billboard and the Puerto Rico Tourism Co. It will mark the first time that any major Latin music awards show has been held in Puerto Rico.

The Latin Music Conference, widely recognized as the most important Latin music event in the world, will take place April 26-29 at the Conrad San Juan Condado Plaza.

Billboard's move to Puerto Rico has been discussed for several years. The island is one of the hotbeds of Latin music: Of the 17 acts that have reached No. 1 on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart during the past 12 months, five hail from Puerto Rico and boast a large sales base in their home market.

The Puerto Rican government sees the conference and awards as a major economic driver. Puerto Rico Tourism Co. director Jaime A. Lopez says the company will invest $2.2 million in the events, estimating that they will generate as much as $12 million in revenue for local businesses.



"All the activities related to the event are expected to generate 12,000 hotel nights to create a direct impact of $8.6 million, plus there will be a multiplying effect that they will have in sales and other activities," Lopez says.

Billboard has been increasingly expanding into other territories. In October, BPP Promocoes e Publicacoes LTDA began publishing Billboard Brazil, a monthly Portuguese-language magazine covering Latin America's largest music market.

"The move to Puerto Rico is a very exciting opportunity for Billboard, as it extends the increasing international presence of the brand and allows us to expand the Billboard Latin Music Conference audience," Billboard publisher Howard Appelbaum says.

The move to Puerto Rico is also a homecoming of sorts for the show's longtime executive producer, Tony Mojena, a native of the island, and for Telemundo, which was founded in San Juan.

"It's a win-win-win situation," Telemundo president Don Brown says. "The Billboard Latin Music Awards are our premier event. And we're coming home to Puerto Rico."

Hola, San Juan: Telemundo president DON BROWN, Puerto Rico Tourism Co. executive director JAIME A. Artists Start To Embrace Augmented Reality To Boost Fan Interaction

Ask any label executive what new technology excites them most and many of them will have the same, ready answer: augmented reality.

Simply put, augmented reality is the process of overlaying graphics, animation or other computer-generated images over a real-life video. A simple, early example of the technology is the first-down marker that sports broadcasters add to their live shots of football games.

In the music industry, it's taken the form of interactive music videos. Participating artists ask fans to visit their Web site, where they can download and print out an image needed to launch the augmented reality application. Once held to the fan's webcam, the image launches a video player on the artist's site that will stream whatever footage the artist has recorded into the scene captured by the webcam.

New 'reality': Augmented-reality videos, such as one demonstrated above for John Mayer, represent a way for fans to customize music videos.

For example, John Mayer used the technology for the online video of the song "Heartbreak Warfare," from his new album "Battle Studies." Fans who download the "Battle Studies" logo and hold it to their webcam launch an Adobe Flash player that plays the music video with the fan's image added to the background as an extra.

Sean Kingston did something similar, allowing fans to film themselves dancing and/or singing his single "Fire Burning" while an animated Lil' Sean character performed alongside them. Aussie rockers Lost Valentinos assigned each band member a different logo so fans could choose which one they wanted to see in their music video and perform next to. And David Guetta used the technology to let fans discover an exclusive track from his "One Love" album during a daylong series of online events as part of a "One Day Online With David Guetta" promotion.

Other acts have become involved through the augmented reality campaigns of consumer product brands. Earlier this summer, customers who bought a bag of Doritos with a special logo printed on it could hold it to their webcam while visiting the Doritos Web site to launch a video performance by Big Boi or Blink-182 that "popped" out of the bag. Users could move the bag around in front of the webcam to change the position of the performance and add their own background to the scene.

According to Mick Management marketing director Kristin Zovich, whose agency ran the John Mayer augmented reality video campaign, fans are beginning to respond.

"We found a really positive reaction to it," she says. "It's just a different way to deliver content to fans so it's not just 'click here and go to YouTube.' It's a little bit more creative."

However, it will likely be some time before augmented reality videos become mainstream. For starters, it's still a clunky technology to use. Users need to give permission for the artist's Web site to access their webcam, but even when they do, pop-up blockers and other security technology can interfere with the connection. In addition, lighting issues and low webcam resolution often results in unrecognizable images.

But the largest barrier is simply the relative lack of webcams among potential users. According to Parks Associates, only 18% of U.S. households with broadband Internet access owned a webcam as of April. Analyst firm Research and Markets expects that figure will increase, forecasting the global market for webcams to increase from $1.8 billion in 2008 to $3.2 billion by 2015.

ABI Research, meanwhile, points to the rapidly growing smart-phone market as having great potential for augmented reality applications, driving the global augmented reality-related revenue from $6 million in 2007 to more than $350 million by 2014.

"I see it much more mobile-based, just because of the utility of the ability to just aim and get information," ABI analyst Larry Fisher says. "It's just easier to use."

Fisher points to such uses as aiming a phone's camera at buildings, businesses or points of interest to launch an app that will provide various types of actionable information about that location on the phone's screen. Many new mobile phones now have advanced video cameras, high-definition display screens and wireless broadband Internet access needed to make augmented reality a viable option.

That could have a number of valuable applications for the music industry, such as getting information at concert venues or in retail stores.

But no matter whether the augmented-reality future is on desktop computers or mobile phones, those in the music industry already dabbling in the technology foresee a long future ahead.

"There is some longevity to this technology," Zovich says. "I don't think by any means this is going to be a flash in the pan. This will be something that will become more commonplace." ••••

HERE IN MY CAR

Few vehicles on the road can connect to the Web. But that may soon change if the technology and telecommunications companies behind the new LTE Connected Car concept vehicle can bring their vision to commercial reality. Their car of the future would use a high-speed wireless Internet connection to essentially turn the vehicle into a mobile server, playing movies on demand, hosting multiplayer gaming sessions and streaming music from Pandora and other services.

Powering these capabilities are the members of the ng Connect Program, which includes Alcatel-Lucent, Samsung and Toyota. They also teamed with Atlantic Records to develop artist-specific apps for the system, including Twitter updates and other fan-artist interaction, as well as TuneWiki for lyrics. —AB

COURT RULES LABELS' LITIGATION CAMPAIGN NOT A 'SHAM'

by BEN SHEFFNER

Was the recording industry's litigation campaign against individual file sharers a legitimate use of the federal courts to seek redress for the devastating effects of Internet-based copyright infringement? Or was it all a big sham," an extortion racket in which large corporations indiscriminately sued helpless defendants based on weak and unreliable evidence, hoping to force quick settlements?

Industry proponents and critics will be debating those questions for years. But for now, and much to the labels' relief, a federal court ruled recently that the labels didn't act improperly in filing more than 7,000 lawsuits against accused infringers, largely vindicating their controversial litigation tactics.

The case in question started out routinely. As with all of their lawsuits, the labels first had to identify the proper target. They began only with an IP address and the Kazaa user ID "otenkito," detected by their Internet-trolling forensic investigators at MediaSentry, who spied his user "sharing" 1,288 song files. The labels then sued the "Doe" assigned to that IP address and issued a subpoena to Verizon, the subscriber's Internet service provider (ISP). Verizon provided the subscriber's name, Tanya Andersen, and the labels filed a new lawsuit against her in her home state of Oregon.

Unlike most defendants, Andersen didn't settle. The labels took depositions and examined her computer, but they couldn't tie her to the illegal downloading, so they dropped the case. The judge, obviously miffed that the labels had put Andersen through the wringer but couldn't prove their claims, awarded her $103,175 in attorneys' fees—one of only two cases in which the labels have had to make such payments.

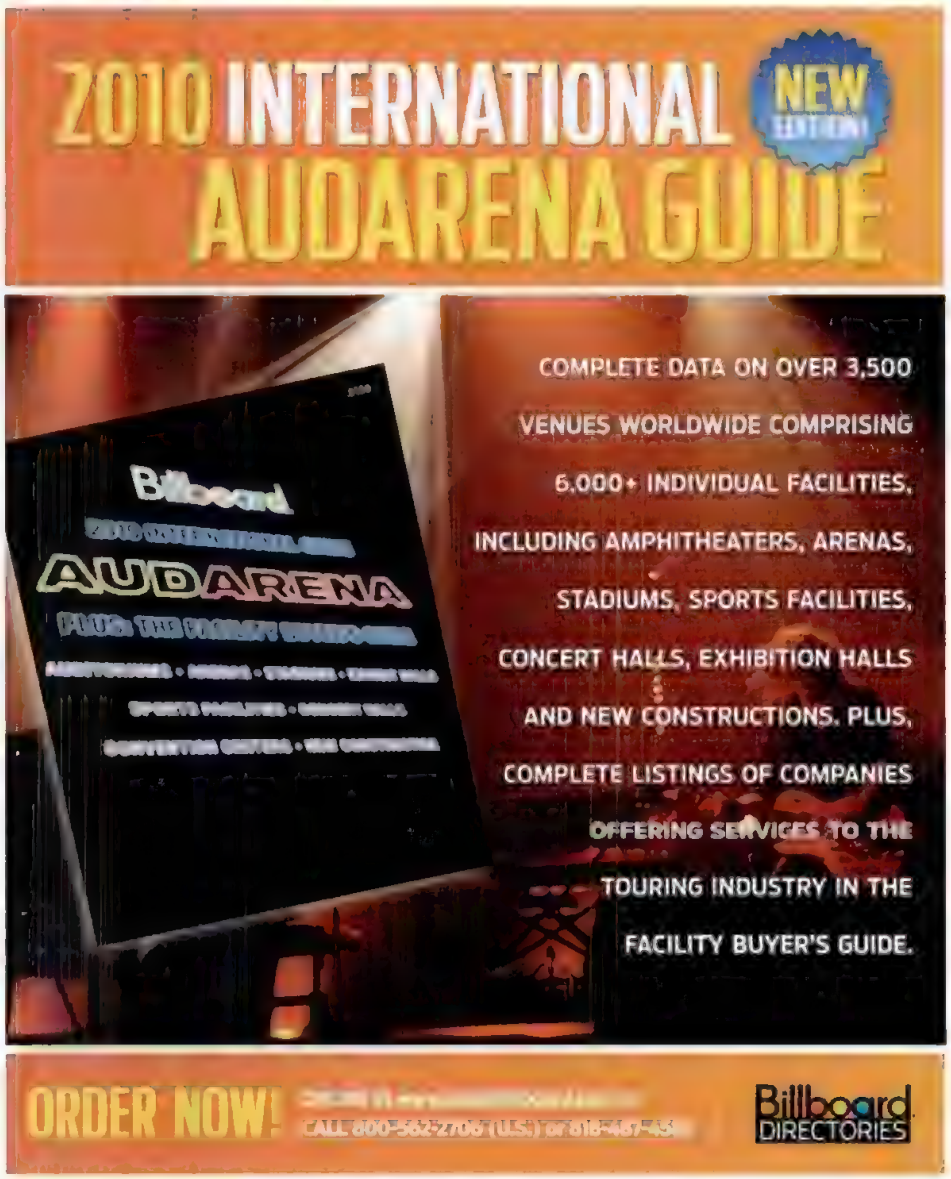
But Andersen wouldn't drop the matter. She sued the labels, the RIAA and MediaSentry, alleging a massive conspiracy to abuse the federal courts by suing innocent individuals with no probable cause. And in a move that considerably upped the ante by potentially subjecting the labels to millions of dollars in damages, she sought class action status, purporting to represent all of those "who were sued . . . or were threatened with suit by [the major labels], for copyright infringement . . . who have not engaged in violation of copyright laws." Anderson's theory was that an IP address coupled with a bolder "sharing" songs is insufficient evidence even to file a complaint, let alone prevail.

In a major victory for the labels, U.S. District Court Judge Anna Brown ruled Nov. 12 that even though they ultimately lost the case against Andersen, they had enough evidence at the outset to bring it. The evidence gathered by the labels and MediaSentry "was strong enough to support 'a chance' that the defendants had correctly identified an individual engaged in wrongful activity," she wrote. And more broadly, Brown observed in her 27-page order, "The court . . . concludes on this record that plaintiff has not established defendants filed a series of lawsuits based on a policy of initiating legal proceedings without regard to the merits."

> Whether or not one agrees with the labels' legal strategy, copyright owners have every right to bring lawsuits in good faith based on the available forensic evidence.

Andersen's case isn't entirely over. The court hasn't yet ruled on her claims that accuse the labels of continuing to litigate her case even after the evidence demonstrated that they should have dropped it. And Andersen's motion to certify the case as a class action remains pending, though last week's order, which rejected the theory that filing a lawsuit based on IP addresses is improper, makes it considerably less likely that a court could identify the common legal issues that are a prerequisite for a class action.

"Judge Brown's ruling certainly vindicates our evidence-gathering process, finding it gave us the right to bring a case against Ms. Andersen," RIAA senior VP of litigation and legal affairs Jennifer Pariser says. "Since the only thing Ms. Andersen had in common with other defendants accused of copyright infringement was the evidence-collection process, it makes sense that the class claims also should be dismissed."



Andersen's attorney, Lory Lybeck, disagrees, saying that the labels' "monumental abuse of the federal judiciary" is still susceptible to a class action, citing survey evidence that he says indicates more than one-third of downloaders were too young even to have their own ISP account. Lybeck says he is "looking at all options," including seeking other plaintiffs who were allegedly wrongfully accused and could act as class representatives.

With fewer than 100 remaining pending lawsuits, only a few of which are being actively litigated, the labels' campaign against individual infringers is winding down. But countersuits like Andersen's remain a danger. Luckily for the labels, Brown's ruling confirms what several other courts have already held: Whether or not one agrees with the labels' legal strategy, copyright owners have every right to bring lawsuits in good faith based on the available forensic evidence, without facing massive liability should they happen, on rare occasion, to lose a case. ••••

HOW TO:

CREATE A GREAT ARTIST WEB SITE

by LAURA O'CONNELL, CREATIVE DIRECTOR, GUPTA MEDIA

's easy for bands to simply rely on MySpace and Facebook for their online presence. But a ell-designed Web site offers almost limitless opportunities for fan interaction, communica- on and monetization that social networks can't. Laura O'Connell, creative director at Web esign firm Gupta Media—which has created Web sites and online content for Pink, Fall Out oy and the Bonnaroo Music Festival—offers her advice on how to put together the right mix f style and substance to get the most out of your site.

FANS WANT MEANING, NOT ARKETING

hen creating a Web site you may have a cer- in goal in mind (selling CDs or showcasing new video), but you have to keep the artist d their persona in the forefront. Whether it's rough specialized font treatments, poignant nagery or bare-bones acoustic videos, the site ould embody the artist and their style. iehard fans will get the CD or watch the video entually. Your Web site is a chance to make connection in a meaningful way with poten- l new fans, so don't scare them off with an vious sales pitch.

SHOWCASE YOUR CONTENT

u've accomplished the hard task of getting meone to your site. Don't lose them by bury- g your content under a confusing interface. there is something you want your audience to know or see, put it out in the open. The top end of a Web page is the "money area" and that's where your best content should be. Having to click on a rocket that flies past the screen or even to a different page for a song sample is not good. There are a lot of sites out there with fantastic content that never go viral because the right people never see it.

3. HAVE AN INCENTIVE

If you want people to blog, tweet and otherwise talk about your site, they need to feel that it's worth sharing. Offer users something that's free or exclusive, but don't make them jump through hoops to get it. Asking for their e-mail is fine, but not the e-mails of five friends. There has to be a balance between what you give versus what you're asking for in return. The purpose of the incentive is to start the conversation, not end it. Getting a free song or seeing the first cut of a video gets people talking, and more importantly, sharing.

4. STAY RELEVANT

Most people use and experience the digital world as something that is timely, useful and personable. They are checking on what's happening within their community on their local news site, what's happening within their industry and interests on blogs and media sites and what's happening with their friends on Twitter and Facebook. Keep this in mind when you are creating your site. There's no point in revisiting a site that is static, so stay relevant for your audience by posting new content and information at least once a week, if not daily for more emerging acts. Let them know what's going on, and more importantly show them that they can come back for new and useful information.

> Your Web site is a chance to make a connection in a meaningful way with potential new fans, so don't scare them off with an obvious sales pitch.

Additionally, give them the tools to update the site themselves. Embrace user-generated content. Make Twitter available on your site so your fans can Twitter for you. If a user missed a concert, let them see how fans from their area enjoyed it by letting fans upload photos to your site. Engage them by using the formats they use.

5. MAKE THE MOST OF FREE ASSETS

Unless you're a wizard at search engine optimization, the odds are fans searching the Internet for information about you are landing on MySpace, Facebook or Wikipedia first. Make sure that these sites mimic what you are trying to do with your site. That means maintaining a consistent tone in your online presence in both design and message. When you post content to one, make sure it's available on all, or at least make it known on all that new content is available. The idea is to have all these online outlets working together rather than independently. Fans will learn about artists in the most random of ways, so the more you can control that experience and make it consistent, the faster people will understand what you're trying to convey. —Interview by Antony Bruno

Apple Of Their Eye

Labels Say The iPhone Is Helping Boost Online Music Sales In Japan

Head lines: Japanese consumers awaiting the iPhone's arrival in 2008 spent days standing in line so they could be among the first to own the handset.

TOKYO—The iPhone effect is ringing in changes in Japan's digital music market.

Apple's new 3GS iPhone has been doing blockbuster business since its launch in June, following a major iPhone marketing campaign that coincided with a rise in online music sales.

Universal International Japan managing director Kimitaka Kato is convinced there is "a correlation between the iPhone boom this year and the rise in online music sales . . . I think we'll continue to see that."

Meanwhile, Warner Music Japan's sales at iTunes "have definitely been increasing over the past few months," label spokesman Tetsuya Ikeda says. "This is simultaneous with the iPhone boom in Japan."

Apple declines to provide sales figures, but market research firm GfK identified the 32GB 3GS iPhone as Japan's top-selling mobile handset during September. While GfK wouldn't divulge unit sales figures, Nobi Hayashi, author of the 2007 book "iPhone Shock" (Nikkei Business Publishing) and widely acknowledged as one of Japan's foremost Apple experts, estimates the model moved about 300,000 units in September.

The rollout of iTunes and the iPhone has coincided with an increase in online music sales in Japan, according to sales data from the IFPI, which classifies iTunes music sales as online sales rather than mobile.

In 2004, the year before iTunes arrived, online sales accounted for 4% of Japan's mobile-dominated digital music market, with 507 million yen ($4.9 million at 2004 rates). By 2007, one year before the iPhone's arrival, that figure had risen to 8% of digital sales, or 5.4 billion yen ($45.8 million at 2007 rates). In 2008, the year the first-generation iPhone 3G arrived, the online share rose to 10% of sales, or 8.5 billion yen ($82.1 million).

The market-share gains for online music sales came despite continued growth in mobile music sales during the same period. But sales during the first six months of 2009 suggest a shift in market dynamics, with mobile sales declining 2% from the same period a year earlier to 39 billion yen ($430 million), while online sales rose 13% to 4.6 billion yen ($50.8 million), according to the Recording Industry Assn. of Japan.

RIAJ spokesman Masaki Suenaga downplays the sales impact of the iPhone. "Consumers are buying full [digital] album releases with extras like photos," he says. "This is the most important factor for the strength of online sales."

But Hayashi says he sees a clear link between the iPhone and online music's rise. In addition to the successful launch of the 3GS model, the iPhone has also benefited from savvy marketing, he says.

Mobile operator SoftBank, Apple's exclusive iPhone partner in Japan, launched an "iPhone for Everybody" campaign in February that offered monthly subscription rates that subsidized the cost of the 8GB 3G iPhone, making the handset effectively free. The 32GB iPhone 3GS costs new SoftBank subscribers 960 yen ($10.61) per month for the handset on top of calling and data plan charges.

"The SoftBank 'iPhone for Everybody' campaign started in February," Hayashi says, "and online music seems to have done well in the same time."

Japan's Telecommunications Carriers Assn. reported that SoftBank had attracted the most new subscribers in September, adding 108,000. SoftBank ranked third in market share with 18%, or 21.3 million subscribers. Market leader NTT DoCoMo, which accounted for 50% of the market with 55.2 million subscribers, added only 66,000 new users in September, according to the TCA.

Mobile industry analysts also say iTunes' relatively low prices for single-track downloads have helped boost online music sales. Tracks generally cost 150 yen ($1.70), compared with 300-400 yen ($3.30-$4.40) for a full-track download from a m bile carrier. "Because prices differ greatly, we mig have to consider a new price strategy," which cou include lowering prices on mobile tracks, says Na hiro Fukao, GM of sales, marketing and digital Universal Music Japan.

Still, the iPhone and iTunes sales face growth ch lenges. For example, the iPhone isn't compatible wi leading Japanese digital music stores like Mora.j Morawin.jp and Music.jp. Also, Apple's technical spe ifications mean iPhone users can only access iTun through a Wi-Fi network, which is problematic i country where free Wi-Fi access is much rarer than the United States or Europe.

If the iPhone "could access [iTunes] through 3G, would certainly have a great impact," Fukao says.

Meanwhile, competition in the smart-phone ma ket is expected to increase with the pending arrival such new models as Motorola's Droid (availab through DoCoMo).

Along with the iPhone, "they will increase the nu ber of music consumers and help increase downloa overall," predicts Nobuhiro Sato, president of Son owned mobile/online digital music retailer Label Ga which operates the Mora and Morawin sites. Sato sa the popularity of the iPhone hasn't hurt the sites' sal

Label sources estimate that iTunes accounts f more than 50% of Japan's online music sales, with t Mora sites jointly accounting for up to 25% and smal sites making up the remainder.

The competitive position of the iPhone and iTu is likely to strengthen in the coming months, an speculation that Sony Music is nearing a deal w iTunes that will finally see its repertoire made av able at the online retailer. (Sony did not comment.

Others are already tailoring their digital marketi to reflect iTunes' strength. Warner, for example, h introduced a range of exclusives ranging from bon tracks, videos or photos for iTunes-only compilatio to bulk-buy discounting.

Increased iPhone-driven iTunes sales could a give international repertoire a much-needed boost Japan, where it has been fading in recent years (B board, April 4). According to Warner's Ikeda, iTu "definitely moves more international repertoire co pared to mobile music stores—and Warner's sales international music have been increasing since t iPhone/iTunes boom has taken hold."

GET IN LINE: APPLE IN JAPAN

2001: Apple's launch of the iPod raises the company's profile in Japan to new levels. The hard-drive music player successfully cuts into sales of Sony's MiniDisc and Discman players, which had long dominated Japan's portable audio market.

2003: Japan's first Apple Store opens in Tokyo's Ginza district. Some 5,000 enthusiasts line the street outside waiting for the opening.

2005: The iTunes Music Store Japan launches. Apple claims sales of 1 million tracks in the site's first four days.

2008: Apple rolls out the iPhone in July. Prospective customers begin lining up outside the Omote-Sando SoftBank store in Tokyo five days before the phone goes on sale.

2009: The Mobile operator SoftBank launches its "iPhone for Everybody" campaign in February, making the 8GB model essentially free to subscribers. In September, the new 32GB 3GS model becomes the month's best-selling handset in Japan, according to the market research firm GfK.

CEASE FIRE

Italian Collecting Society Stays United—For Now

MILAN—Warring factions at Italian publishers and authors' society SIAE have called an uneasy truce after the re-election of president Giorgio Assumma—but members warn the society's financial performance must improve if the peace is to hold.

While Assumma was re-elected unopposed at a Nov. 6 meeting in Rome of SIAE's 64-member representative assembly, 25 delegates abstained from voting. Two earlier attempts to confirm Assumma in the role, on June 23 and Oct. 27, both failed, with the earlier meeting marked by a mass walkout of delegates unhappy with both Assumma's presidency and the society's 2008 financial report.

The assembly's "La Nuova SIAE" (The New SIAE) grouping—composed mainly of major publishers, prominent writers/composers and larger independent publishers critical of Assumma's four-year tenure—says it dropped its opposition to his re-election in order to prevent a permanent split, which could have resulted in the society being placed under government control.

But La Nuova SIAE, which had the majority of assembly delegates at the 2007 elections but has suffered a number of defections since, insists Assumma and new director general Gaetano Blandini, elected by SIAE's nine-member governing council Oct. 26, must now put the society's financial affairs in order.

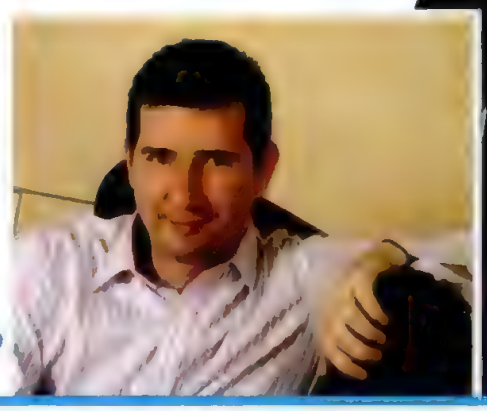
"Like any business, SIAE must increase its revenue and reduce its costs," says delegate Filippo Sugar, president of publishing group FEM and chairman/CEO of Milan-based Sugar Music, a leading indie label with a large publishing catalog. "We will offer our full cooperation in endeavoring to solve the society's problems."

SIAE says it collected €671 million ($996.4 million) in 2008, with music accounting for €475 million ($705.3 million) of that figure. But, while total collections were up 5.7% from 2007 (music rose by 4.6%), the society still reported a pretax loss of €12.4 million ($18.4 million), although SIAE's accounts attribute this to the loss of €35.2 million ($52.3 million) stemming from the collapse of Lehman Brothers. SIAE was placed under government control for four years in 1999 after reporting a loss of 53 billion lira ($53 million at 1999 exchange rates).

Members were also alarmed by a decline in collections from digital licensing to €5.1 million ($7.6 million) from €7.2 million ($10.7 million) in 2007.

"Most collecting societies redistribute royalties rapidly," says delegate Toni Verona, GM of Modena-based indie publisher/label Alabianca. "But SIAE often keeps the money for as long as 16 months. The interest the money gathers by sitting in the bank is used to finance the society's considerable running costs."

Verona also claims "at least a third" of SIAE's 85,000 members earn such minimal royalties that "the money spent on administering their membership is greater than the amount they generate for the society."



The Italian government must still confirm Assumma and Blandini's appointments. In the meantime, both have declined to talk to the media.

Members of SIAE's other main faction, "La SIAE di Tutti" (SIAE for Everyone), which largely comprises smaller publishers and less-well-known writers/composers, insist the new management is well-qualified to address the problems.

"Assumma is an excellent 'super partes' [impartial] president with a good relationship with the political world," says delegate Leopoldo Lombardi, president of independent publishers' group AFI. "We are confident Blandini will prove a capable manager."

Lombardi and Verona both agree that one positive aspect of the dispute has been an increase in dialogue between the factions.

"We now have a relationship," Verona says. "They, like us, now understand that if SIAE continues like this, it will eventually become ungovernable. Between now and the next SIAE elections in 2011, we must all work together to change things." ••••

Here And Now

New Services Simplify Direct-To-Consumer Sales

At first, singer/songwriter Coffey Anderson just wanted a way to save his voice.

"I was singing on the street in Santa Monica [Calif.] all day long, and while I'd sell a lot of CDs, I'd be hoarse," he says.

Looking for another way to expand his audience, Anderson started posting videos online. He then started working with Ustream to hold live video chats with his audience, seeking their input as he worked out new tracks. But he still didn't have a quick means to sell them the tracks they'd watched him labor over.

Anderson then discovered Audiolife, one of a growing number of direct-to-consumer sales tools. Working with Audiolife, Anderson was able to sell songs to fans directly on his Web site (icoffey.com) only minutes after they'd watched him record them. Now Anderson says that not only do his fans not have to wait for a proper album release to buy his music, they can create customized versions of albums, select which version of a song they want to buy and even buy personalized songs, which he sells for $19 a pop.

Direct-to-consumer sites are giving independent artists and labels the opportunity to fully control what they'll sell, and when. The technology also gives them the ability to collect information about who is buying the goods—information they don't get when their music is sold through Amazon or iTunes.

"The biggest value of selling direct-to-fan is that the artist or label get more data and more money," Echospin cofounder Jon Lowy says. "The artist or label can also control the price and availability—if they want to sell a track for a limited time or at a certain price point, they can."

Selling direct-to-consumer also allows an act to super-serve an existing fan base. "For one of our bands, Kill Hannah, we sell everything from branded pillowcases to versions of the album with audio commentary," Original Signal Recordings head of digital Danny Da Silva says. "Of course, we also have them on iTunes and in stores, because they're still a growing act, and we need to make sure we enable discovery."

But selling direct-to-consumer doesn't have to stand apart from music discovery—and perhaps in the future, it will be able to enhance it. For instance, Audiolife CEO Brandon Hance says that while band-centered stores and affiliate stores might not exist in large numbers now, they could soon. For example, fans of Dirty Projectors could visit the band's store and not only buy its tracks, but albums by contemporaries in the Brooklyn music scene like Grizzly Bear and Animal Collective.

And while direct-to-fan commerce might have been difficult to enable in the past, a host of new companies is simplifying the process. "The first time we did online stores for labels in the early part of the decade, we did about 15 or 20 and then pulled out," InSound founder Matt Wishnow says. "The process was just too cumbersome. But more recently, we started getting requests to get back into the business again, and I decided that we would only do it if we could build a platform that could launch an online store in a day. We did, and now we have another group of labels working with us."

Wishnow says he's seen bands use the platform to do everything from throwing limited-time sales they publicize on Twitter to getting albums out quickly in response to leaks. "There is almost no waiting with direct-to-consumer sales," he says.

"From the fan perspective, ease of use is king," Lowy says. "While there have always been low-tech ways to sell directly to fans, Echospin provides a platform that's as easy as iTunes for the consumer. If it's a painless process and the fan can just do everything on one page, they're much more likely to actually spend the money." ••••

The Miracle Workers

Latin Indie Publicists Are Now Expected To Work Magic In Many Different Areas

Looking for a one-stop shop: LA MOSCA

Once upon a time, a publicist's job definition was simple: send out press releases and coordinate interviews. But now, in addition to getting ink, the role of the indie music publicist has grown and evolved to include strategy, marketing and sponsorship coordination.

This is particularly true of the Latin music world, where print outlets have shuttered left and right, opportunities are limited to begin with, and there are only a handful of national media outlets with vast reach.

"The publicist is now such a bigger part of the pie," says Ximena Acosta, who calls herself an entertainment marketing consultant. "It's like the marketing director and the publicist have merged into one."

Acosta is one of many indie publicists or marketing consultants who have opened their own businesses in recent years after working in a label.

What they've all found is a marketplace rife with artists—signed and unsigned, major and indie—that are willing to pay for services but not content with a flack merely sending out a press release or getting a write-up.

A few years ago, indie publicists were largely the realm of Latin artists who wanted to cross over into mainstream media. Today, with shrinking label staffs, having an indie publicist to complement label efforts is increasingly common, especially as priority shifts from merely selling albums to creating and exploiting an artist's brand, a task that requires steady, long-term attention.

"Five years ago, the label would hire me and my role was to provide an added value, such as a review in the Dallas Morning News," says Mayna Nevarez of Nevarez Communications. "Today, I have much more responsibility. First, the artist hires me. And by the time the album comes out, we're part of the team and of the marketing strategy. Sometimes we even help put the team together."

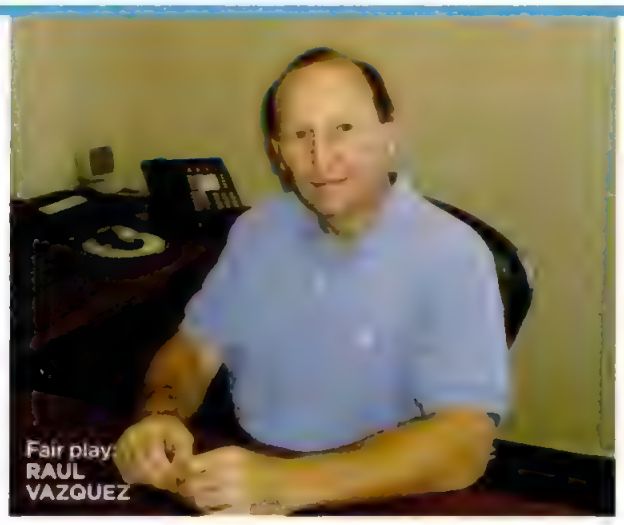
Because most artists pay her directly, Nevarez specifically looks for promotional platforms that not only don't cost the artist upfront but also generate a sponsorship fee, like Daddy Yankee's recent deal with Coors Light (Billboard, Nov. 14).

In Puerto Rico, Nanette Lamboy, owner of marketing, events and PR company Artists Solutions, brought Argentine alternative band La Mosca on a six-stop promotional tour with support from Medalla Beer, which thought the group's image and sound fit the brand.

"The role of the publicist is constantly changing," adds Susan Stipcianos of the Dream Team Agency. "More and more acts are looking to build multifaceted teams. The publicist has to adapt to the speed of the news—not only blasting a press release, but putting the information up on Facebook, on Twitter, informing fans and being plugged into the pulse of the territory to keep the artist relevant."

And while developing a press plan for, say, Alicia Keys is a publicist's dream, the real challenge lies in generating opportunities for developing acts.

While many artists—especially big names—still have separate publicists to work mainstream and Latin media, connecting the dots is an additional challenge for Latin acts. For example, take Cucu Diamantes, an indie artist who received glowing reviews in mainstream media but wasn't recognized by Latin press. Acosta opted to initially introduce her through a series of intimate get-togethers with Latin tastemakers in different cities.



At the recent Latin Grammy Person of the Year dinner, Monica Escobar of the 3 Collective sought to put prominent artists together with executives for Hennessy, her client.

"Our role was more that of a connector," she says. "When we started, our objective was to be a PR company, but we've had to become more resourceful and proactive." ••••

DEAD AIR

Labels Locked In Royalty Feud With Costa Rican Broadcasters

Fair play: RAUL VAZQUEZ

A fight over performance royalties has come to a head in Costa Rica, where the government has sided with the country's broadcasters and is not enforcing a performance rights law for artists and labels.

According to a declaration it made to the World Intellectual Property Organization, Costa Rica's government said that as of Nov. 14, it would apply a performers' and producers' (meaning, labels') royalty only to broadcasts "for commercial purposes," and not to "traditional free, noninteractive over-the-air broadcasting." Songwriters aren't affected by exemption.

The move has sparked an outcry from the local recording industry and the IFPI, which have been pushing for the ability of Costa Rican labels' group Fonotica to collect 1% of broadcasters' advertising revenue for artists and labels. Artists' advocates say Costa Rica has been a party to international treaties governing such a right for almost 30 years.

"They're hurting their own artists, international artists, local producers, international producers," says Raul Vazquez, Latin America regional director for the IFPI. "They're going against the tide of expanding rights for creators all over the world. All of Latin America recognizes this right."

With the implosion of recorded-music sales in Latin America, the IFPI has stepped up its efforts in recent years on behalf of local collecting societies in the region to recoup what they're owed from broadcasters. In a legal dispute between Brazilian society ECAD and media company Bandeirantes, a local court recently sided with ECAD in the society's calculation of a royalty rate for public performances. (According to the IFPI, ECAD is seeking $35 million from Bandeirantes for what it says are 10 years' worth of unauthorized music uses).

Efforts by Costa Rica's recording industry to obtain court orders that would halt radio stations' use of the recordings haven't succeeded in keeping the music off the airwaves. Meanwhile, radio association Canara's attempt to revoke Fonotica's authority to collect was recently met with a court defeat.

According to a missive on Canara's Web site, the labels' group represents a "monopoly" of multinationals representing themselves as one entity in Costa Rica "trying to charge for what we transmit for free to all Costa Ricans . . . after they've already obtained massive economic advantages because of that communication and free promotion."

Efforts to interview a Canara representative were unsuccessful at press time. The IFPI is asking collecting societies to write letters protesting the Costa Rican government's decision.

ANOTHER TOP BOW FOR SANTA ROSA

On Billboard's Top Tropical Albums chart, Gilberto Santa Rosa's "Lo Mejor de Gilberto en la Navidad" debuted last week at No. 2 (selling slightly less than 1,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan) to become his 11th top five debut on the chart. He's now tied with Victor Manuelle for most top five debuts on the chart. (The two salsa singers share one of those debuts, 2005's "Dos Soneros, Una Historia.")

On Top Latin Albums, "Lo Mejor de Gilberto en la Navidad" debuts at No. 13, Santa Rosa's highest debut on the chart since "Autentico" bowed at No. 3 in the Sept. 11, 2004 issue.

NEW YORK SONGWRITERS CIRCLE DIRECTOR/ PRESIDENT

Tina Shafer

The head of the New York Songwriters Circle talks about the organization's growing slate of artist services.

Inspired by the famed songwriter rounds at Nashville's Bluebird Café, the New York Songwriters Circle has long provided a home for the city's local acoustic scene. The company's twice-monthly showcases at the Bitter End in Manhattan's Greenwich Village have featured an impressive roster of artists who've gone on to enjoy successful careers, including Norah Jones, Gavin DeGraw, Vanessa Carlton, Lisa Loeb and Jesse Harris.

In recent years, the company has been expanding its ambitions, launching an annual songwriting contest, starting a monthly "Loft Series" of educational seminars and releasing a compilation album in November featuring some of the circle's most accomplished artists. It's also started songwriter circles in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles and is going international in February, with chapters in Milan and Hamburg.

The company hosted the finale of its fourth annual songwriting contest Nov. 18-19 at the Bitter End, featuring performances by 12 finalists selected from more than 4,000 entries.

Kate Voegele, the winner of the inaugural contest in 2006, has since secured an Interscope deal and a recurring part on the CW network's "One Tree Hill." This year's grand prize includes $10,000 cash, a Gibson guitar, an invitation to record with producer Glenn Barratt and to perform with John Oates of Hall & Oates, as well as live performance opportunities.

Since 1991, the circle's director has been singer/songwriter Tina Shafer, whose songs have been recorded by artists like Celine Dion, Donna Summer and Bette Midler. In an interview with Billboard, Shafer talks about the circle's aims and its expanding artist-development efforts.

How would you describe the fundamental purpose of the Songwriters Circle?

I always believe what goes around comes around and that's one of the reasons why I believe the circle works. It's kind of a farmland to nourish and discover new talent. It's where all these people come to us and we try to find the right connections for them. We are much more interested in partnering and servicing than we are in owning and taking.

Can the Songwriters Circle format be applied to any genre of music, these independent organizations acting like mini A&R companies?

I think that [scenario] is the future. I have a really small listening team with people I really respect and love, and that is the innermost heart of our company because it's really my ears and our decisions. And I'm sure that could go across the board for any type of music.

When I was a little girl growing up in the '70s, so much of music was produced and managed by people that were musicians. I'm a musician, and I'm a writer and an artist, and I get what it is to be that, so I feel like I have this edge when I listen to people's art.

The business got so thrown off the track—they took it out of the hands of the artists and musicians and put it into business hands, and we were just like a Campbell's soup can. It wasn't about the music.

What's coming back is understanding what great content is. Absolutely. You take some of the top producers—the Arif Mardins, the Russ Titelmans—all these people really knew music. That kind of went by the wayside for many years and that's coming back, and I couldn't be happier.

It's called the Songwriters Circle, but many writers who have come out of there have gone on to artist careers themselves. Do you focus on developing talent with the potential of becoming both writers and artists?

There are two tiers in the company. One tier is that every song that comes into the circle, I flag with my team if I love that song. It may not make the top 12 for a contest or it may not be the next Kate Voegele, but if the song is amazing, I will give it to our music supervisor and say, "Hey, can you try this at 'One Tree Hill' or whatever?"

What sort of stake does your organization have in the artists?

We get a fee that an agent would receive if we get a song placed in a film or TV [show] or an ad, just like anybody else. We're partnering—we're not taking publishing, we're not doing any of the old-school things. And then the second thing is, for the [songwriting contest] winner, we have an 18-month period to try to find them a proper home, either a publishing deal and/or a record deal—and that's it. So basically, we're asking them to trust us for a year-and-a-half to try and find them great homes.

Singer/songwriter music seems to be more difficult to spread virally than other genres. Does the Internet facilitate the success of certain types more than others?

I wish I had a crystal ball. I can only say that I have found that if great content gets a chance to be heard, if it gets to be on a TV program, then I think that your chances are huge, that people will love you and will want to spread the word. I think being a singer/songwriter is probably more of an intellectual, cerebral-based genre.

But look what happened to Norah Jones. I remember her talking to me at the Bitter End. I was like, "What are your fears? What are your fantasies? You just moved to New York." She's like, "I just want to own a VW Bug and sell 10,000 records and just do my jazz act." And I'm like, oh, my God, she got that times 500 trillion. So who knows?

What kind of response have you had in other cities?

It's been great in every city, but different. [In] Boston, we're partnered with Berklee [College of Music], and it's all songwriters from the college, so that's been explosive, it's always sold out. Chicago is at Schuba's, the best club for that genre in Chicago. And the kids have nowhere to go, so they're excited. We're trying to give a home to a genre that hasn't had a home. The only one that's really different is L.A.—what they want to see are established hit writers, and maybe bring along one up-and-comer, so [it's] a little bit different balance than what I originally had.

In Milan, we're opening in February, and that's going to be established acts because the stars have never done anything like this. They're going to have circles with their established talent. So it's going to be a little bit flavored according to the state or the country.

Why did you pick Italy for the international start?

Well, it kind of picked me. This guy named Dado kept Facebooking me and sending me stuff and talking about how much he loved what we did, and I said, "Well, hey, dude, you want to start a Facebook group there for us? And maybe we could get some talent to our contest." And then the next conversation was—he had a great manager—"Well, what about us doing a circle here? Everybody would go crazy." They're over the moon about having a Songwriters Circle there. ••••

LESS THAN A YEAR AFTER THE 'AMERICAN IDOL' WILD CHILD BURST ONTO THE SCENE IN AN EXPLOSION OF GLITTER AND LEATHER, ADAM LAMBERT READIES HIS FIRST ALBUM

BY ANN DONAHUE | PHOTOGRAPH BY ROBERT SEBREE

Adam Lambert—the man with the outsize personality who delivered an audacious octave-and-a-half sitar-tinged purr of Johnny Cash's "Ring of Fire" on the most-watched TV show in the country, dodged sex toys thrown at him onstage during the "American Idol" tour and did it all without smearing his eyeliner—is currently curled in the fetal position. Balled up in a patio chair on the 10th-story balcony at 19 Entertainment in Los Angeles, Lambert is the portrait of the goth as a young man—black clothes and combat boots; dyed black hair and nail polish; Egyptian-themed jewelry matching the Eye of Horus tattoo on his wrist.

We are the champions: ADAM LAMBERT (left) and KRIS ALLEN (right) perform with QUEEN during the 'American Idol' finale in May.

He grabs his knees and constricts himself even tighter as he reveals why he's so emo right now: He's attending the premiere of the film "2012" in a few hours. And his song, "Time for Miracles," plays over the closing credits.

"I'm going to be like this, in my seat, hiding in my popcorn bucket," he says. "It's going to be really weird."

Lambert laughs, unfurls his legs and straightens up in the chair. His worry is, of course, all a joke, an act, a performance. Because, true to his album title, Lambert is here for our entertainment.

When "American Idol" launched in 2002, creator Simon Fuller must have dreamed of a contestant like the 27-year-old Lambert—one that mixes style and substance, one that can sing anything and gives a damn about cultivating his public image. In a year, Lambert's gone from being one of a herd of auditioners at the San Francisco tryouts to landing the covers of Entertainment Weekly and Rolling Stone before his album was even released.

For 19 Entertainment, the eighth season of "American Idol" was something of an embarrassment of riches—the eventual winner, Kris Allen (see story, page 20) has sold 1.1 million digital downloads of his "Idol" songs, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and contestant Allison Iraheta, with her preternaturally gravelly vocals and artful red and blue hair (see story, page 19) is prepared to court the Hayley Williams/Avril Lavigne demographic.

But in a year when the clubby stylings of Lady Gaga and the Black Eyed Peas are setting sales records, it's Lambert's slinky set of dance songs that are poised to steal the spotlight. "For Your Entertainment" will be released Nov. 23; the title track lead single sold 18,000 in its first week of release, according to SoundScan, while "Time for Miracles" has sold 68,000 in three weeks. This comes on top of the 997,000 digital tracks sold of Lambert's songs from "Idol."

"He's an artist with a true sense of who he is," RCA Music Group GM/executive VP Tom Corson says. "It's our job to work with him and present him with options to help steer the ship—but ultimately it's his call. He has a vision."

'ENTERTAINMENT' TONIGHT

The cover of "For Your Entertainment" shows Lambert as a three-dimensional version of Patrick Nagel's artwork for Duran Duran's "Rio": all glam makeup and sharp angles. It's not subtle in any way—Lambert is gleeful as he points out that he wore all that makeup—but it's true to his image as a showman that combines singing talent with a theatrical bent.

It's an image he flaunted throughout "Idol"—and was never more exemplified than in Lambert's retort to judge Simon Cowell's critique that one of his performances was too "Rocky Horror." ("I like 'Rocky Horror,' " Lambert patiently explained.)

But it's rare that a persona crafted on "Idol" doesn't go through some sort of intensification as the performers transition from contestant to professional: Texas cutie Kelly Clarkson took on a pop sheen; Carrie Underwood's country chops were honed on the show.

For Lambert, he was "Glambert" from the start.

"I think there's a misconception—people think that 'Idol' is like a Svengali puppeteer," Lambert says. "I think that may be the perception because certain people that have gone through the system didn't have a strong idea of what they wanted to do visually. I think the minute you do, they respond to that. And I've been very verbal and opinionated about what I want to create, and they've been nothing but supportive of that."

When Lambert moved to Los Angeles from San Diego eight years ago and began working in theater and as a session singer, he quickly learned that business acumen was just as important as musical talent. At 27, he's in the upper age range of "Idol" contestants—the cutoff for the show is 28—and the simple fact of his added life experience could serve him well as he transitions away from the spotlight that is built into the show.

"I do consider myself part artist, part businessperson," Lambert says. "I find marketing interesting, I find publicity interesting. I find the whole process interesting. I think there's some artists that are really focused on the music and the artistry, but I also think being a showman and being an entertainer is more than just being a musician. It's everything—it's something to look at and to listen to."

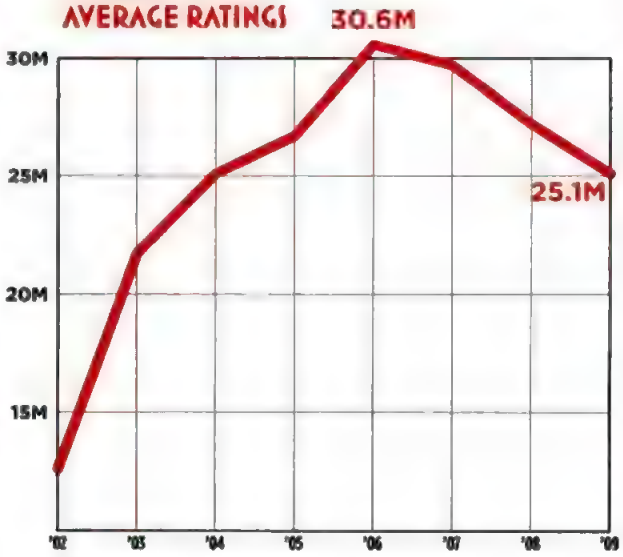
The songs on "For Your Entertainment" rely heavily on dance beats, but there are a number of ballads for contrast. "When I was picking my singles, I thought maybe I should do more of a rock thing because that's what people expect. But if I did what people expected of me, I don't think I would have gotten through 'Idol' the way I did," Lambert says. "It's part of my shtick as an artist to keep surprising people."

One defining characteristic is the A-list writing and production credit throughout the album: "Soaked," which Lambert says is about a one-night stand, was written by Muse's Matthew Bellamy and produced by Rob Cavallo, who worked on four tracks on the album; "Strut" was written by Lambert, "Idol" judge Kara DioGuardi and Greg Wells, who also produced; Ryan Tedder wrote and produced "Sleepwalker" alongside co-writers Aimee Mayo and Chris Lindsey.

"If an artist has the skills and ambition to write songs, then we will actively encourage and pursue this, often by pairing our artists with the world's very best songwriters, allowing them to learn and develop their writing skills," 19 Entertainment founder/CEO Simon Fuller says.

The announcement of the pairing of Lambert and Lady Gag on the track "Fever" was fodder for gossip blogs, but Gaga doesn actually perform on the track, Lambert says, explaining, "Sh was on the other side of the glass just egging me on."

The title track—which was produced by Dr. Luke, who co-wrot it with Claude Kelly—is now being worked to top 40 and hot A radio. "I wanted to release something that would be played in club, that would make you dance on New Year's," Lambert say



He means that literally—"Dick Clark's Rockin' New Year Eve With Ryan Seacrest" is one of the TV appearances lined u for Lambert in the coming months; the campaign starts No 22 with his show-closing performance at the American Musi Awards. Besides the typical rounds of morning and late-nigh talk shows, Lambert will be interviewed as one of the "Mos Fascinating People" of 2009. "Adam is so telegenic. It's goin to be a visual launch," Corson says.

A video for "For Your Entertainment" is forthcoming. It's d rected by Ray Kay, who did the video for Lady Gaga's "Poker Face ill likely be the next single.

Internationally, Corson says the label intends to break Lamrt first in the United Kingdom and Japan.

For his part, Lambert wants to tour in 2010—and tour big. "I ant dancers, I want costumes, I want video screens," he says. want to put on a show that's really theatrical and fun and grand."

DOL' GIVES BACK

ll of this is the end result of a heady year for Lambert. At this me in 2008, he was waiting for the Hollywood elimination unds of "Idol" to start. In TV time, it takes six months for "Idol" crown a winner, but the production process runs year-round.

Despite the artifice of the show, it does drop-kick contestants to the media spotlight—a valuable lesson for any pop star.
hey put you through it to see if you can hang," Lambert says.

The 2009 season of "Idol" attracted an average of 25.1 million ewers, according to Nielsen, the lowest average in several years;
t it's still the most-watched show on TV, as it has been since 04 (see chart, page 18). The finale where Allen was proclaimed e winner over Lambert was watched by 28.8 million viewers—million more than the 2009 Grammy Awards.

"The finale of 'Idol' was pretty epic," Lambert says. "I got up ere and was singing with Queen and Kiss—I got to put on a stume. I really feel the finale summed up what I'm trying to
, and what I'm going to do. I think that being onstage with leg-dary people like that reminds you of what showmanship is."

Weeks after the "Idol" season wrapped, the top 10 contest-ts embark on the Idols Live tour—a valedictory sprint of 52 ies in three months that grossed $30 million this year, ac-rding to Billboard Boxscore (see chart, page 18).

While group numbers are a standard part of the show, each gh-finishing "Idol" contestant gets his or her chance to shine a solo. Lambert did a medley of David Bowie's "Life on Mars?," ame" and "Let's Dance." He saw it as a chance to stage-test e sound he had in mind for his debut. "I always wanted to do owie songs, and I never did them on 'Idol' because it wasn't er the right fit," he says. "We did a different, slightly modern oduction, which is basically what I'm doing on my album."

And much like the TV show, the "Idol" tour puts its partici-nts through the wringer. "I've done theater for years and I've ng for a long time, but I've never done a solo set in concert ght after night while traveling," Lambert says. "It was a good y to learn about how to take care of yourself and how to pace urself while on the road."

With the fame comes accompanying challenges; Lambert
s become a favorite subject of the tabloids and paparazzi.
eah, it's weird," he says. "You know, it's like, 'Hi, I'm just lking to my car—why do you care?' "

It's very likely that they care because of the wink-wink, nudge-dge game that was played in the media about Lambert's sex-lity during his "Idol" tenure. Lambert demurred on the estions about whether he was gay until the Rolling Stone arle; since then he's unwittingly become Adam Lambert, Icon Gay Youth. It's not a mantle he shoulders easily.

"I don't want to be a spokesperson for anybody, no matter
o they are," he says. "I'm not following this career path to a role model or to be a poster child for anything except for usic. If there's an indirect impact that my presence has on rtain issue, then I think that's a good thing."

It's a mature point of view to take as Lambert's private life comes inextricably linked to his public persona. It's an issue
t will get raised again and again—as he walked the red cart for "2012," for example, he was asked if he brought a date.
s laughing response? "My date is my jacket, actually."

A few days after the premiere, Lambert is sitting in Fuller's ice, swiveling back and forth in a white office chair as he pre-res for another long day of media interviews. The movie, as urned out, was a blast, and "Time for Miracles" was warmly eived. "People stayed and listened," he says, honestly happy.
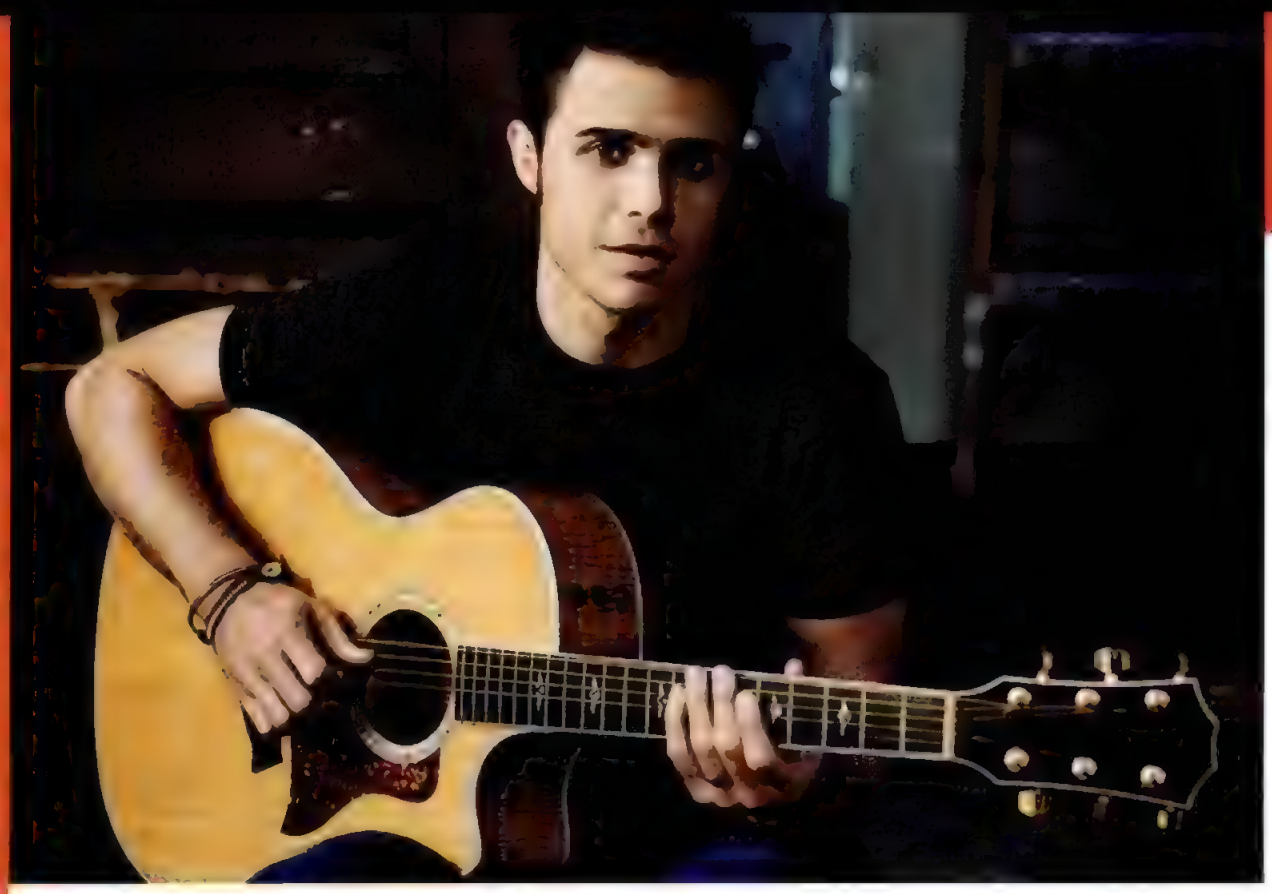
Of course they did. That's entertainment. ••••

RED HOT

Season Eight's Punk Princess ALLISON IRAHETA Wants To Parlay Her Big Voice Into Hefty Sales

It's a moment that Allison Iraheta isn't fond of recalling. After performing in one of the early rounds of "American Idol," host Ryan Seacrest approached her for the standard chat-'em-up interview. And by her own admission, Iraheta flubbed it. She stammered, stumbled and looked like she was going to collapse into a fit of giggles—or tears.

"Yeah, that was an awesome first timer with Ryan Seacrest," she says with a laugh. "Being on the show and the tour definitely helped prepare us all for what we're going to be doing now. I'm much more comfortable on the big stage."



To be fair, live TV can be intimidating—and Iraheta is only 17. But her youth and inexperience didn't stop her from attracting heavyweight producers like Max Martin and Howard Benson for her debut album, "Just Like You" (19 Recordings/Jive), which is due Dec. 1. The lead single, "Friday I'll Be Over U," has sold 10,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

"It's a pop album with a rock edge over it," Iraheta says. "There's some hard stuff—like when you're at a concert, it makes you want to lift up that lighter . . . or iPhone."

Jive Label Group GM/executive VP Tom Carrabba says the label will focus on Iraheta's peers in the teen market with targeted radio, TV and online campaigns, but will also reach out to the Latin market. A Spanish-language version of "Friday I'll Be Over U" will be worked to radio. "She does speak Spanish, and it really works," Carrabba says. "It's not contrived." (In 2006, Iraheta won Telemundo's singing competition "Quinceañera: Mamá Queiro Ser Artista.")

Iraheta says the "Idol" experience has given her more confidence not just as a performer, but as a songwriter. The album closes with "You Don't Know Me," a track co-written and co-produced by David Hodges. "I don't know if I'm shy when I'm sharing my ideas—because I don't know if they suck or not—but I get a little quiet, maybe," she says. "He just made it so comfortable. We were talking about things that sort of piss us off most, and for me, it's prejudgment. And we wrote it about that."

With the recording of her first album behind her and as she heads into the promotional grind, Iraheta is keeping up her mix of sweet and sassy that won her fans on "Idol"—occasionally breaking into an imitation of Cartman from "South Park" and offering this about her multicolored locks: "It probably lasts a good four to five weeks before the coloring starts coming out. It bleeds when I shower. It looks like a horror movie." She's become, in other words, a good interview. —AD

THE BILLBOARD Q&A:

KRIS ALLEN

'American Idol' Season-Eight Champ Talks About His New Album, His Upcoming Tour—And What He Learned From Wikipedia

One year ago, Kris Allen was attending the University of Central Arkansas, playing gigs at local bars and adjusting to life as a newlywed. Now, thanks to "American Idol," he's enough of a brand name that his major-label debut is self-titled.

"Kris Allen" (19 Recordings/Jive) was released Nov. 17, and odds are good that Allen can build off his digital single sales success from "American Idol." To date, Allen has sold 1.1 million copies of tracks he performed on the show, according to Nielsen SoundScan, lead by his version of the show's coronation song "No Boundaries" with 312,000. Allen sold more total "Idol" tracks than runner-up Adam Lambert (997,000) or fourth-place finisher Allison Iraheta (79,000).

"The exposure an up-and-coming artist receives from 'American Idol' is nothing short of amazing," RCA/Jive Label Group chairman/CEO Barry Weiss says. "Where else in today's difficult music industry can one get five years of artist development, artist loyalty and public awareness achieved in a short five months?"

The first single from the album, "Live Like We're Dying," is being worked to top 40 and hot AC radio and has sold 98,000 copies, according to SoundScan. Jive Label Group GM/executive VP Tom Carrabba says Allen will have 13 TV appearances between now and New Year's Eve.

"We have 'Idol' fans and young girls as big supporters, but I think we can also attract moms and guys who are going to respect his live performance," he says.

Jive wants to key into the emotional subtext of the lead single as well. The label teamed with AOL to debut the video and to sponsor a contest in which fans who submit stories of living life to the fullest are eligible to attend the recording of Allen's AOL Sessions in New York.

Much of Allen's success on "Idol" derived from his ability to insert his skills on guitar and piano into his performances, creating affable interpretations of songs like OneRepublic's "Apologize" and Bill Withers' "Ain't No Sunshine." For his debut album, Allen takes a similar approach, relying on his musicality for a collection of guitar-driven pop.

It's been a pretty intense time for you, going from winning "Idol" to the tour to the recording of the album. You co-wrote eight of the songs on the album, and you have a solo writing credit on one of them. How did you manage all that work on the road?

Your mind has to switch over from two different things. When you're on tour, you're trying to get the crowd involved and really sing and perform to them. When you're going to write and be in the studio, it's like, "Now I have to think about me." That's the mind-set you have to work with.

I keep a journal, and maybe I'll take something from that—but when I'm writing a song I'll usually just be playing around on my guitar. More than anything, I just try to capture a moment.

You have a solo writing credit on "Red Guitar." What was your inspiration?

I bought a red guitar for my wife for her birthday and she never played it [laughs], so we ended up sticking it on the wall in our house—it was a horrible guitar, just like a $50 guitar—but it was a good house decoration. And one day I picked it up and tuned it and started playing it, and this song just became kind of a metaphor for how I feel about my wife. It was nice to get that one on the album because it was something from before the "Idol" stuff and I feel like it's an amazing song. It shows who I am as a songwriter and as a musician.

On the album, you worked with everyone from Switchfoot's Jon Foreman to producer Mike Elizondo. Is there anyone out there you'd like to collaborate with?

It would be fun to write with Adele, actually. She seems like a fun girl to write with. I'm still new in the music business—it was funny, they would be like, "You're going to write and produce with this guy," and I'd be like, "OK!" I didn't know who it was, so I would look them up on Wikipedia. When I went to work with Mike Elizondo, I had no idea who he was. I went the Internet and it was like—Dr. Dre, Eminem, Switchfoot, M roon 5, Fiona Apple and a bunch of people, and I was like, "Wha he doing with me?" [laughs] I ended up going to his house ma many times and working on a lot of songs with him.

How did fans respond when you previewed a few of t songs off the album at a tailgate party for a Miami Do phins game in October?

"Can't Stay Away" is a really, really fun song to perform, rea funky, really groovy. I think people can really get into it. It w kind of crazy, because the first time anybody heard that song was in that crowd—and people started singing along. That' good thing. I had a huge smile on my face the whole time.

What was it like filming the video for the first single, "Li Like We're Dying"?

It's a song that has a really good message—that we only ha so much time, let's make the most of it. It's definitely got o of the choruses where I can picture people rolling down t windows of their cars and singing along to it.

The video looks great. It was really fun shooting it—we sh it from 8 p.m. until 8 a.m. so it was an all-night thing with breaks. [The shoot was] set up like a digital clock, but it's hug it's this monstrous thing—like 25 feet tall and who knows he long. I get to hold a flare, which was pretty cool. I ended throwing it at people on set. [laughs]

On the show, you always made a point to compleme your singing with playing an instrument, which is som thing the TV audience really responded to. Did you ma that same connection on the album?

Most of the songs are very guitar- and piano-driven. I was pus ing really hard to make sure it had that organic feel to it, whi I also really wanted to have on the show. Obviously, you've g to amp it up a little bit—like Gavin McGraw or Jason Mraz wou

On "American Idol," the spotlight was always on you a Adam Lambert. Simon Cowell kept trying to set up a valry, and now you have albums coming out within a we of each other.

That's the thing—we're going to go through at least the fi part of our careers doing everything back to back. We were the show throughout the whole time, then we were on the to and now we're coming out with albums. I feel like we're alwa going to have this time of our lives, we're going to share it, a we're going to be able to go through it together. We know actly what the other is going through.

Did you watch "American Idol" while it was on the air

I actually did not watch myself. I just couldn't. It's too muc I'm a little bit hard on myself, so even if the judges were rea nice I'd be like, "Dude, that was bad."

What did you learn from the "American Idol" tour th you can apply to your own tour?

It's a lot of work. You kind of have to prep yourself physical mentally, emotionally, because it's crazy. More than anythi I think it will be [the lesson of] making the most of every m ment. We're only going to be in those cities once and those pe ple only get to see one show—I think that you have to give your all every night. I always loved when we were on tour a I came off the stage just drenched in sweat.

I'm going to do some Christmas shows for radio, and af that we're going to start rehearsing through February. I do know exactly what we're going to do yet on tour; we may d college, small club kind of thing, which would be really fu We may get on an arena tour as well; maybe a little combi tion of both. We're going to tour until we can't tour anymor

Who inspires you?

I just watched "This Is it" last night. Michael Jackson was t biggest star the world has ever seen—he put so much into eve thing; a lot of attention to detail. I want to do that. I want to p that kind of attention to detail in everything—in music, vis ally—all of that. —A

The Evolution Of Leona Lewis

On 'Spirit,' LEONA LEWIS Was The U.K.'s Girl Next Door Who Conquered The Globe. Now, On 'Echo,' She's Taken Charge Of Her Image And Her Songwriting—And Is Ready For A World Tour

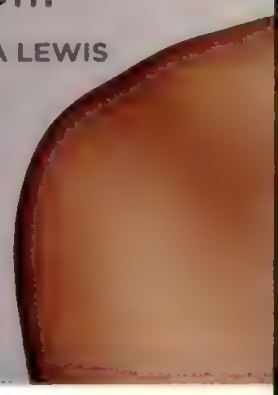
BY CRAIG McLEAN

VIOLENCE AND THEFT

Not words one would normally associate with Leona Lewis, the squeaky clean winner of "The X Factor," who went on to stunning worldwide success with her debut album, "Spirit."

Nor, one imagines, exactly how Clive Davis, Simon Cowell and Sony Music Entertainment envisaged the comeback push for Billboard's top new artist of 2008.

While the campaign for Lewis' debut was hitch-free, the setup for its follow-up, "Echo"—released Nov. 16 in the United Kingdom on Cowell's Syco Music and a day later in the United States on J—has been anything but smooth.



First, in mid-August, three songs from the album sessions leaked onto the Internet, reportedly after Syco's IT system was hacked.

Then, more dramatically, Lewis was assaulted Oct. 14 during a London book signing for her autobiography, "Dreams." The man accused of punching her in the head was committed under the United Kingdom's Mental Health Act.

"It was a shock," Lewis says of the attack, which left her bruised. "I was very sore. The main thing is that I'm still alive."

'I wanted something that showed where I was as a person and as an artist now. And I think I did that quite well.'

—LEONA LEWIS

By the time Billboard catches up with her, two weeks after the incident, she's even able to smile about it, particularly the tabloid reports that Lou Al-Chamaa—the childhood sweetheart with whom Lewis still lives in her working-class home neighborhood of Hackney in northeast London—rushed in to tackle her assailant.

"He wasn't even there," she says. "That makes me laugh. I'm sure if he was there, he would have. My dad and my brothers weren't there [either]. They're usually at different things that I do. But I'm so glad that they weren't. Because, oh, my God . . ."

In the immediate aftermath of the assault, Lewis canceled promotional trips to Germany and France, and pulled out of a high-profile U.K. TV appearance on BBC 1's "The One Show." She says she has no lasting concerns about making public appearances.

The Internet leak was dealt with in similarly succinct fashion, as the IFPI's anti-piracy unit teamed with law enforcement agencies on both sides of the Atlantic. A criminal investigation is ongoing, according to Syco head of media Ann-Marie Thomson. Dave Shack, London-based VP of international for Sony Music U.K., says, "I don't think it did us any real damage."

PROMOTIONAL PUSH

Shack's comment must be a relief to all concerned with promoting one of the year's most hotly anticipated albums. After all, "Spirit" sold 6.5 million copies worldwide (according to Sony), including 1.6 million in the United States (according to Nielsen SoundScan) and 2.8 million in the United Kingdom (according to the Official Charts Co. [OCC]). It also earned Lewis three nominations at the Grammy Awards and four at the BRITs.

The international breakout single, "Bleeding Love"—co-written by Jesse McCartney and OneRepublic's Ryan Tedder—hit No. 1 in Austria, Canada, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Ireland, Norway, Switzerland, Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as Billboard's European Hot 100 Singles chart.

Such success had been a long time coming for Lewis, who attended the United Kingdom's BRIT School for the Performing Arts and spent much of her teenage years writing and recording in search of that elusive break.

When it came, it catapulted her to unprecedented heights for a U.K. talent show winner, but Sony Music chief creative officer Clive Davis has no doubt she deserves every bit of her success.

"Leona has one of those very, very special voices that's expressive and has an incredible range," says Davis on why—of all the new artists who regularly cross his desk—he chose to back her so wholeheartedly. "But she also can feel the lyric very sensitively. You look for that in a singer. She's also passionate about music—it really runs in her soul. That combination made me feel that she was a special new talent."

All of which leaves a lot for Lewis' second album to live up to. Scott Seviour, New York-based senior VP of marketing and artist development for RCA Music Group, says the "Echo" campaign will have three long-reaching phases.

The "ignition point" was Lewis' September appearances on "VH1 Divas" and the finale of "America's Got Talent" the same week that lead single "Happy"—a slow-burning, epic ballad co-written with Tedder and Evan Bogart—went to top 40 and hot AC formats.

So far, however, "Happy" has only peaked at No. 50 on the Billboard Hot 100, selling 156,000 U.S. downloads, according to Nielsen SoundScan. "Bleeding Love," in contrast, has moved 3.8 million, the 12th-biggest-selling U.S. download of all time. "Happy" was released digitally Nov. 8 in the United Kingdom; the song has been performing strongly at U.K. radio, so far peaking at No. 4 on the OCC's radio airplay chart and debuting at No. 2 on the U.K. Singles chart Nov. 15.

"We all know 'Happy' is a fantastic song and a great calling card to come back [with]," Shack says. "But the caveat is, it's song that takes work. We were always going to struggle to ha 'Bleeding Love' part two."

Nonetheless, all parties say "Echo" has much greater dep than Lewis' debut. Phase two of the campaign encompass the release of a second single, currently tipped to be either "Lo Letter" or "I Got You," in February. Phase three will kick-st with Lewis' first tour in May.

"When an artist breaks in as many countries as Leona di they have to go all over the world," Davis says. " She really h to go and help introduce her [new] album in all those countri that were interested in her."

WORLD MUSIC

As she meets Billboard in a central London broadcast stud on a sunny October morning, Lewis is doing a good job of kee ing her own excitement in check. Little wonder, as she has pace herself: During the next seven hours she's conducting back-to-back interviews with U.K. regional radio stations.

She points out that the release dates for "Spirit" were sta gered internationally, but "Echo" is being released simultan ously worldwide, hence today's compressed schedule.

Fortunately, the success of "Spirit" means she now has h pick of promotional platforms. After a Nov. 4 slot at Spain's P mios Ondas awards gala, she performed at MTV's Europe Music Awards ceremony in Berlin the following day—a sign icant step up from her role presenting an award at last yea ceremony in Liverpool and, Shack says, a crucial European ca paign launch point.

"Her peers visually are Jay-Z and Beyoncé and all the peop on the show this year," he says. "Those are fantastic lumina ies for her to be sharing stages with and proving that she's big European star as well."

Then there was her Nov. 8 return to U.K. ratings champ "T Factor," timed for maximum impact on single and album ales, before heading for the States and a run of high-profile V engagements on "Today" (Nov. 16), "Dancing With the Stars" Nov. 17), "The Ellen DeGeneres Show" (Nov. 19), "The Tonight how With Conan O'Brien" (Nov. 19) and "Jimmy Kimmel ive!" (taped Nov. 20, with the airdate still to be determined).

In person, as on TV, the 24-year-old is glamorous but de- ture. As befitting her committed vegetarianism and stated in- ntion never to undertake raunchy photo shoots, her knee-high oots are a man-made version of suede and accessorized with ozy tights.

And while, as Shack puts it, "18 months ago, she was that arlet that had won 'The X Factor' and this was her first foray ito promotion, so she was a bit caught in the headlights," she ow radiates sleek, professional polish as she professes to not ven know the meaning of "the sophomore slump."

"I wanted something that showed my growth, that showed here I was as a person and as an artist now," she says of "Echo," ostly recorded in Hollywood's Henson Recording Studios. and I think I did that quite well."

HE WRITE STUFF

practice, this meant telling the titanic figures of Cowell and avis—both credited as producers on "Echo"—that she wanted greater hand in songwriting.

She has co-writes on 10 of the U.S. version's 14 tracks (in- uding hidden track "Stone Hearts & Hand Grenades") as com- ared with two on "Spirit," although the U.K. version replaces e Tedder/Lewis composition "You Don't Care" with a show- opping cover version of Oasis' "Stop Crying Your Heart Out."

And, while Shack says that "Oasis have more resonance in Eu- pe—a lot of middle America won't know that track at all," Lewis vvily points out that different international editions mean there scope for repackaging the release with additional tracks further down the marketing line. The special edition of "Spirit" was responsible for 800,000 of its total U.K. sale, according to the OCC.

For "Echo," Lewis wrote a wish list of "everyone I wanted to work with." A fan of his 2008 hit "Let It Rock," she sought out Kevin Rudolf to co-write the uptempo "Love Letter." John Shanks, who has written for Bon Jovi and Kelly Clarkson, was recruited for "Broken," co-written with A. "Novel" Stevenson.

"I wanted a song that was just massive," Lewis says. "That one for me is the most vocally crazy."

Overall, "Echo" throws less of what Lewis describes as the "conventional" R&B-diva shapes. "Outta My Head," co-written by Swedish pop powerhouse Max Martin, is a Euro-club banger that, with a couple of strategic remixes, could do healthy business on next's summer dance charts. "Don't Let Me Down," co-written with Justin Timberlake and featuring him on backing vocals, is strings-drenched, midtempo, taut funk.

And then there's Tedder. He and the rest of OneRepublic guest on "Lost Then Found," while he and Lewis also wrote "You Don't Care," working on it in Tedder's Denver studio and London's Abbey Road—the latter location enabling Beatles enthusiast Tedder to channel the spirit of "Strawberry Fields Forever" in the opening bars.

"We've got a good chemistry together," Lewis says. "He re- ally gets me as a person."

"Leona's still learning as a writer but she has some definite God-given talent," Tedder says. "To some degree she's my muse. All that matters to us is putting really meaningful lyrics with really meaningful melodies. When she sings a song, you know you're going to be hearing it 10, 15 years from now at weddings."

Tedder first encountered Lewis at a songwriters conference organized by Davis at the Beverly Hills Hilton in early 2007. Lewis performed in front of a range of A-list hitmakers that also included, Tedder recalls, Stargate, Ne-Yo, Diane Warren and Desmond Child. By coincidence, it was the same week Tedder wrote "Bleeding Love."

"Clive is very old-fashioned and still the best," Tedder says. "That was probably the single smartest thing he did in the whole Leona album process. I think just about every hit she had from 'Spirit' came from the people in that room."

With "Echo," Lewis was determined to be front and center of that creative process. Was Cowell, the man who effectively discovered her, supportive of that?

"Simon doesn't really care whether I've written it or it's by Max Martin or Ryan Tedder," she says. "He just wants the best song. So when I sent him 'Happy,' I was like, 'I hope he doesn't actually see that I've written it.' But then he was like, 'Oh, this is amazing.' Then he found out I co-wrote it, and he was just like, 'Well done, I really rate you for that.' "

It's this evolution of Lewis, Shack says, that is key to the "Echo" campaign. "It's about movement, growth, her coming of age," he says.

TOUR DE FORCE

As well as her development as a songwriter, Lewis is ramping up by wearing custom-tailored outfits designed by British fashion icon Vivienne Westwood, who will also be involved in Lewis' move to the concert stage.

Lewis' world tour—projected to run for nine months—will kick off with nine U.K. arena dates in May and June, booked by Creative Artists Agency. She starts May 28 at Sheffield Arena and will also include two shows at London's O2 Arena. Harry Magee, Lewis' co-manager at London-based Modest Management, expects that run to be extended, or that Lewis will return for further U.K. gigs as part of a European tour in the fall. "In America, we'll be touring in the summer," he says, "either as part of a package or as special guests." Dates in Australia and Japan will follow in late 2010 and early 2011.

Magee says production details are still in the early stages—contrary to some Internet rumors, Michael Jackson's choreographer Travis Payne hasn't been hired—but fans should expect something spectacular.

After all, despite the lack of headline concerts, Lewis is hardly a stranger to the stage, performing everywhere from the closing ceremony of the Beijing Olympics (with Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page) to Nelson Mandela's 90th birthday party in London's Hyde Park to the 2008 MTV Video Music Awards (with Lil Wayne and T-Pain). She sings "I See You (Theme From Avatar)" over the end credits of James Cameron's anticipated sci-fi film "Avatar."

And, a week after Billboard meets with her, Lewis performs her first full live show. It's a homecoming gig, at the 1,500-capacity Hackney Empire, a grand Victorian theater that was also the venue for Lewis' first talent competition.

"I sang 'My Heart Will Go On' by Celine Dion, which is a big song for a 13-year-old," she says with a laugh. "And I won, which was cool. I've been back there since and sang, although it was covers. It's so important for me to go back there and be able to do my own material."

The nine-song, 50-minute set features Lewis backed by six Shaolin-style dancers, two backing vocalists, a six-piece band and inventive lighting and visuals (at one point she sings from between the giant projected image of her own legs), all overseen by creative director William Baker, who for many years performed the same role for Kylie Minogue.

Despite the occasional hint of tentativeness, it's an impressive performance. Lewis's rich, soaring voice effortlessly fills the venue. Her elegant, expansive cover of "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face," featured on "Spirit," demonstrates her skills as an interpreter of standards, while "Happy" and "I Got You" (another Martin co-write from "Echo") already sound like stone-cold classics.

That "evolution" campaign seems firmly on track, although no one will offer predictions just yet for how "Echo" might sell in comparison with "Spirit."

"I never make predictions—I find that too intimidating," Davis says with a chuckle. "All I know is, we've worked hard to avoid any pitfalls with the sophomore album. We've got a great number of very strong songs that showcase the growth and maturing and development of Leona as an artist and as a creative person. The rest is up to fate." ••••

black is the new ROC

THE BLACK KEYS TEAM WITH DAMON DASH, MOS DEF AND RZA FOR A HIP-HOP LABOR OF LOVE

BY MONICA HERRERA

It's a bleary, rain-soaked afternoon in late October, and huddled in a corner table at DuMont restaurant in Brooklyn, the Black Keys are talking vegetables.

"My mom said that when she was a kid in the winter, you couldn't get any at the grocery store," says drummer Patrick Carney, who's picking at the last traces of his poached eggs and field greens.

Dan Auerbach, the Keys' singer/guitarist, looks at his bandmate, perplexed. "Where'd she live, dog?"

"Toledo," Carney replies, citing the Ohio city west of Akron, where he and Auerbach grew up. "She said that all you could get was, like, iceberg lettuce."

"Toledo's jacked up."

The Keys' aside has little to do with what they've been discussing thus far: "Blakroc," their Damon Dash-orchestrated hip-hop collaboration set for release Nov. 27—Black Friday. But it still hints at why the band's latest project could seem unorthodox to many. Here are two Ohioans who make swampy garage-blues that, while marked by the virtuosic playing that's made the Black Keys a can't-miss live act, feels firmly planted in a blue-collar rock aesthetic.

The Black Keys, however, will be the first to say that as kids, they worshipped one hip-hop pioneer in particular. "RZA is my hero," Auerbach says of the Wu-Tang Clan's patriarch. "It was crazy and amazing to be in the studio with him." Carney adds, "There were more people listening to hip-hop at our high school than rock'n'roll."

With their new material, the Black Keys want to shake things up. "Black Keys fans know that the band is not a one-trick pony," manager John Peets says. A host of seasoned rappers, from RZA, Jim Jones and Ludacris to Q-Tip, Pharoahe Monch, Mos Def and even deceased Wu-Tang member Ol' Dirty Bastard appear on "Blakroc," dropping rhymes against a dense backdrop of Auerbach's dingy guitar riffs and Carney's stomping drums.

Aside from their last album, 2008's "Attack & Release," little of the Black Keys' hip-hop influence appears on their previous work. The duo recruited producer and Gnarls Barkley member Danger Mouse (Beck, Gorillaz, MF Doom) for that effort and made what is widely believed to be their strongest work to date, as well as their best-selling: "Attack & Release" sold 192,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, ahead of the Keys' 2006 album "Magic Potion" (116,000) and their 2004 tipping-point release "Rubber Factory" (147,000).

"Fans know the band is open to evolving, and I think that record with Danger Mouse cracked open the door—we're just walking through it," Peets says.

Auerbach's vocals rarely even appear on "Blakroc." Dash's former Roc-a-Fella Records artist Nicole Wray provides many of the hooks, the first of a few signs that "Blakroc" isn't your average mash-up album.

"We weren't trying to make a rap-rock record," Auerbach says. "We were trying to make a good record. When my voice was appropriate we'd give it a shot, but we were totally comfortable playing the backing band, as long as what we were doing is effective."

Auerbach is right. "Blakroc" works because at its core, it's a hip-hop album with an exceptional backing band. And it's part of a rising trend that favors live instrumentation over sampled beats.

What the Black Keys, Peets and Dash hope is that music fans will naturally gravitate toward a project that—at a time when labels are scrambling to manufacture a moneymaking hit—developed organically.

"It's the same reason why two suburban white kids would get into Ol' Dirty Bastard at the age of 13," Carney says. "Why can't someone who's into ODB get into the Black Keys?"

NATURAL SELECTION

Dash hadn't heard of the Black Keys until this past April. Two of his assistants left the office one night to see the band in concert, piquin his curiosity. "I was like, 'Let me hear thes Black Keys,' " says the Roc-a-Fella co-founde and former business partner of Jay-Z. Dash g a copy of "Attack & Release" and as he listene to it, "I got infected," he says. "It was just er hancing the mood, and it started to become m theme music; it became an every-day, all-da thing—the Black Keys in heavy rotation."

"He was like, 'How does a band that I'v never heard of sell 5,000 seats in NYC?' " Aue bach says. " 'How is this band self-sustainab and doing all this business stuff, and I don know anything about them?' "

Pretty soon, Dash was hatching a plan f the band to collaborate with Jim Jones, th Harlem rapper whose career he shepherde He tracked down Peets by phone and pr posed a studio session in New York, with n strings attached.

"I knew that once we got in there som thing was going to happen," Dash says. "I ju didn't know what it was."

In June, Peets had the Black Keys fly in f a recording session at Studio G in Brookly where Dash would arrange for Jones to me them. Though Auerbach and Carney were ope to recording with hip-hop artists, they, in tur admit that they weren't wholly familiar wit Dash's work.

"As a kid I grew up listening to Wu-Tang ar the Pharcyde, and Damon's Roc-a-Fella stu came after that," Auerbach says. "And I didr know Jim [Jones] at all. I got on the Internet, ar all I saw was that he had more friends on M Space than anybody I've ever seen, and had mo people shitting on his music than anybody I' ever seen. I didn't know what to expect."

One artist whose music Auerbach and Ca ney were familiar with was Mos Def, who c incidentally ran into Dash on the street t night before the Keys' session with Jones. "M new the Black Keys and was a fan—he was in-cted, too," Dash says. Mos Def would be the rst rapper to record with the Keys at Studio , and when Jones arrived four hours later that me night, they all laid down the bluesy "Ain't othin' Like You (Hoochie Coo)," one of three ngs on "Blakroc" to feature Auerbach's vo-ls and the first track leaked to the public.

"Jim was super nice and really seemed to g the music," Auerbach says, "and the fact at Mos wanted to work with us was really ol. That's when I said, 'This is for real.' "

More happy accidents soon followed. When e Keys told Dash they wanted to work with ZA, Dash contacted his old friend through eir mutual barber in Los Angeles. "I was like, f you see RZA, tell him I'm looking for him,' " ash says. RZA would soon record two tracks "Blakroc" and was the only guest artist to so work with Auerbach and Carney on the usic, playing electric guitar on "Tellin' Me hings" and keyboard on "Dollaz & Sense," hich also features Pharoahe Monch.

"Damon just invited me to the studio to vibe t with some creative people," RZA says. "I've en playing guitar for three years now and I ways wanted to record myself, so I took a shot it and caught a cool riff."

As recording continued, the Keys' ap-oach to creating "beats" evolved. "At first e were sticking to electric guitar, bass and ums, but then we started to come up with repetitive riff and deconstruct it," Carney ys. "It's a little more experimental than hat we normally do."

Dash recruited another Wu-Tang Clan ember, Raekwon, for the standout track tay Off the F*%&#n' Flowers." "I came over the studio and I liked what I heard," Raek-n says. "It just seemed like part of the world at I need to be in. I have a bunch of white ns that care about me, so why not represent the rock side? We are all cousins inside the music business anyway."

Except for supporting Jones, Dash has mostly been working outside of the music industry since his Roc-a-Fella days, focusing instead on filmmaking and his ex-wife Rachel Roy's fashion line and opening an art gallery last month.

On "Blakroc," however, the way Dash assembled an impressive lineup of veteran artists is a testament to his lasting credibility among his peers. "Hip-hop respects Damon Dash, no matter what the media thinks," RZA says. "Even though him and his man [Jay-Z] split the atom and went their separate ways, we know it was a combination for both of these men's work that built their strong empire."

BY THE NUMBERS

Inside the tight quarters of Studio G, Auerbach shuffles from side to side, shuts his eyes and nods his head smoothly—a perfectly respectable way for a rocker to respond to an MC rhyming over his guitar licks. Carney looks on as the veteran Brooklyn rapper O.C. takes the mic. "Guitar strides got me zonin'/Drum kicks and snares got me in an altered state," he raps, as a cameraman—one of two videographers that Dash has hired to film every second of the "Blakroc" recording sessions—zeroes in on him. When O.C. exits the booth a few minutes later, he's clearly excited by the experience. "I like this room. It makes me sound professional," he says.

The Black Keys finished recording "Blakroc" in 11 days during the summer, but they're still making hip-hop music. Though they're not ready to publicly reveal any artist names, O.C. is just one of many rappers who've hit the studio with Auerbach and Carney in recent days. No one knows whether these new sessions will ever materialize into a second Blakroc album, but as with the first one, no one is letting logistics kill the creative flow, either.

"We haven't stopped since we started," Auerbach says. "It's not even like we're making a second one—basically we just kept going."

Soon after O.C. leaves, Dash swoops in with three of his employees—one armed with a bottle of Veuve Clicquot—and gives a half-dozen pounds and bear hugs to Auerbach, Carney, Peets and nearly everyone else in the room, instantly changing its dynamic. It's striking to see Dash back in the studio, a once-second home that he's ready to re-embrace.

"I couldn't do any more hip-hop unless I did something different," he says. "Now we have all these artists like Mos and RZA on something different, something that's never been done. It's going to open new doors."

For Dash, it's already doing that. He's now working on two other collaborative albums, one between the rapper Curren$y and Mars Volta drummer Thomas Pridgen and another between Raekwon and the Disco Biscuits. The mogul also submitted edited documentary footage of "Blakroc" to the Sundance Film Festival, and he's timing the launch of his new TV venture, CreativeControl.tv, for Nov. 27 to coincide with the album release. In addition, Dash and Mos Def recently co-produced a documentary about the all-black Detroit punk band Death, and Dash plans to launch an online radio station.

On the subject of the album's sales potential, Dash is less committed. "I don't care," he says. "We made good music. Roc-a-Fella wasn't fun, it was work. Everyone that I helped ended up turning their back on me. The minute I put them in the place where they could make money, then they wanted to make beef. I'm not in that business anymore. Every single second of this has been fun."

As the de facto president of the Blakroc imprint, it's Peets' job to handle the business strategy for the project. The Keys' manager set an off-cycle, Nov. 27 release date to take advantage of the biggest retail day of the year. Physical distribution will be handled by Junketboy and exclude mass retailers, which he says is the band's way of "making a stand. Independent record stores have been so important to the Black Keys. To give back to them and support the thing that got us here during a big retail time is really important." The Keys' label, Nonesuch, will handle digital distribution.

The marketing plan for "Blakroc" stems mostly from its Web site, which has premiered a new behind-the-scenes viral video every Friday since Sept. 11 leading up to the release date. The strategy has worked, with nearly all major hip-hop and rock online outlets spreading the content and furthering anticipation.

The Black Keys' upcoming performances on "Late Show With David Letterman" (Dec. 8, with Mos Def and Jim Jones) and "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon" (Dec. 10, with RZA) will also help bring exposure. Although a more extensive live performance has been discussed, Peets says it wouldn't entail "hitting the road. It would have to be a very event-driven, special thing."

Additionally, Harley-Davidson has created a Blakroc motorcycle incorporating the project's logo to be sold through Harley-Davidson of Cool Springs in Nashville and at Blakroc.com. An exclusive Chevrolet 2010 Blakroc Camaro, featuring all-black wheels and glass, will also be sold at the Web site and at Carl Black Chevrolet stores in Nashville and Atlanta. Finally, the boutique chain ACE Hotels will host "Blakroc" listening parties in its lobbies.

"It's a bit like a graphic equalizer with the middle pulled out," Peets says of the business plan. "There's a lot of low-end organic stuff going on, and then there's a higher-end effort to create something lifestyle-oriented for the community of people coming together around this music."

But will that community be big enough for "Blakroc" to turn a profit? "It would be nice to break even, and if it's more than that, fantastic," Peets says. "We've been economical with this, and accountability is something we need in the music business industry anyway. The goal is to make another record, so that if you manage everything properly and set reasonable expectations, then all of the sudden you're an artist—you're contributing."

After recording the "Blakroc" album, the Black Keys went to Alabama to finish their sixth studio album, which has a projected release date of April 2010. No hip-hop artists will appear on the set, but Auerbach and Carney were influenced by their side project in more subtle ways.

"Mostly it was the positive momentum we had coming from such a good project," Auerbach says. "We kept that positive energy and jumped right into the studio."

It's Dash, though, who is coming away from "Blakroc" with the most excitement about what lies ahead. "I'm inspired again," he says. "When I left music, everybody was so worried about making money that they didn't make money anymore. In this environment, you can do whatever you want—you don't have to worry about singles, you don't have to kiss ass, and you don't have to answer dumb questions. You get to keep the spirit alive." ••••

ON THE RISE

Australian Sales Edge Out Of The Red, With Digital Leading The Way

BY LARS BRANDLE

Business is looking up Down Under. While the world's most powerful markets struggled with the global financial crisis of 2009, Australia's economy enjoyed slight growth in the first half of this year, and its music industry played a similar tune. Led by a burgeoning digital market and respectable CD album sales, the value of Australia's recorded-music industry expanded by the thinnest of margins—just 0.4%—in the first half of 2009. For the first time, the pace of growth in digital sales outpaced the decline in physical product.

A host of factors contributed to the feel-good figures. The overall economy is buoyant, broadband penetration is rising, and the digital market has been refreshed with a slew of innovative new arrivals, including Nokia's Comes With Music and MySpace Music earlier this year and the launch of Vodafone's MusicStation subscription service in late 2008.

The upward trend offers a positive backdrop to this year's Australian Recording Industry Assn. Awards set for Nov. 26 in Sydney. Whether the gains reflect an early stage of recovery or just a false horizon, however, only time will tell.

"The half-year figures look encouraging," says Stephen Peach, CEO of the Australian labels association ARIA, which issues the official trade figures for the recorded-music market. "Whether we've reached that transition point where the growth in digital outweighs the decline in physical, we'll see what the full-year figures look like."

During the six months that ended June 30, Australians spent more than $37 million Australian ($33 million) on downloads, ringtones and other digital music formats, up 43% from the same period in 2008. The bulk of legitimate online traffic came in the form of digital tracks, a format that generated $18 million Australian ($16 million) in income, up 36.5%. Another bright point has been the digital albums format, which rose nearly 56.8% in first-half value to $9.3 million Australian ($8.4 million), and now represents 8% of overall album sales, up from 4.7% in the corresponding period of 2008."

"There is a positive feeling from consumer feedback that sales will continue strongly through the crucial Christmas period," says Sony Music Australian and New Zealand chairman/CEO Denis Handlin, whose company ended 2008 with the market's three top-selling albums by Kings of Leon, Pink and AC/DC. Sony artist Jessica Mauboy also leads this year's ARIA nominations with seven nods. "Our new business continues to expand" as well, Handlin says, citing Sony's new touring arm, Day 1 E tertainment, and its label-agnostic digital store, Bandit.fm.

"Labels are engaging more directly with artists' fans. They' become more digital-savvy and they're marketing heavily v MySpace, Facebook, Twitter and blogs," says Paul Paoliell COO of the Sydney-based mobile personalization, entertai ment and technology provider Mercury Mobility.

Australia is emerging as a solid test market for digital ser ices. Nokia's all-you-can-eat subscription offering arrived Mar 20 Down Under, just the third market to launch behind th United Kingdom and Singapore. Figures leaked to the press early October suggest the service h made an impact. The Australian bus ness reportedly had 23,003 active use in July, second only to the 32,72 Comes With Music users during th same period in the United Kingdom News Corp.'s MySpace Music arrive in October in Australia, just the seco market behind the United States.

Prime Minister Kevin Rudd h proposed an ambitious national broa band network, described by Rudd the "largest infrastructure decision Australia's history." Both projects a progressing and should foster the cou try's nascent online music market. in 2009 the battle lines were drawn the digital world. Sony's Bandit.fm portal added new features in August that enable artists to upload and sell their live releases. At the end of March, EMI Music Australia launched the blog and A&R resource InSoundFromWayOut to complement its Musichead MP3 download store. Universal Music Australia has its GetMusic online store. (Warner Music Australia has yet to announce its plans to launch an online store.)

THE ECONOMY IS BUOYANT, BROADBAND PENETRATION IS RISING, AND NEW DIGITAL SERVICES ARE EMERGING.

A survey released in August by Immedia, a Sydney-based publisher and events organizer, found that Bandit.fm grabbed a 4% share of the market, besting the efforts of rival record companies. Where the likes of GetMusic and Musichead are looking for footholds in the market, label sources identify iTunes as the runaway market leader with more than 70% of the download market.

Over-the-air downloads are yet to take off in Australia. The same study revealed only 9% of respondents had purchased music on a telecommunications carrier or handset manufacturer in the past year.

For all the hope digital brings, the physical CD album is still tops Down Under. Australians bought more than 15 million CD albums in the first half of 2009, 5.9% fewer than in the first half of 2008, and the format slid 4.5% in wholesale value to $125.5 million Australian ($108 million). But the CD album still accounted for more than 70% of the total $178.6 million Australian recorded-music market in the first half. CD singles and the music DVD/video formats had steep declines during the period.

Australia continues to maintain a vital domestic talent scene. Australian artists fared well on ARIA's top albums and singles charts in the first half, contributing 23 albums (21.3%) and 16 singles (13.8%). A handful of home-grown acts appeared on international charts during the year. Empire of the Sun, the Temper Trap, Daniel Merriweather, the Veronicas and Orianthi all had breakthroughs overseas, while Missy Higgins finally got some traction in the United States with her second album, "On a Clear Night" (Eleven).

Indigenous singer Geoffrey Gurrumul Yunupingu's stunning solo debut, "Gurrumul," sold nearly 200,000 copies, according to his label Skinnyfish Music, just shy of Australia's triple-platinum-certification threshold. The album also charted in Germany and the United Kingdom through a partnership between Skinnyfish Music and Mike Batt's Dramatico Entertainment.

"It's great for all of us when an Australian artist breaks through internationally," says EMI Music Australia chairman Mark Poston. "Right now, it feels like there's real interest for Australian music again." Empire of the Sun and the Temper Trap are among the nominees at this year's ARIA Awards. And the Temper Trap last month cracked Billboard's Heatseekers Albums chart with "Conditions," on Liberation/Glassnote Records.

Other rising Australian acts have begun to gain international notice.

Tame Impala from Perth on Modular Recordings, whose self-titled EP reached No. 1 on the Australian Independent Record Labels chart, will share the bill with international stars at the Big Day Out Festival in Australia and New Zealand next year. Sarah Blasko, signed to Dew Process, will release her third album, "As Day Follows Night," across Europe next year through a licensing deal with Dramatico. The rock band Violent Soho has been signed to Thurston Moore's Ecstatic Peace label through Universal. Lisa Mitchell, a 2006 contestant on "Australian Idol" and an ARIA Award nominee this year, had her debut album, "Wonder," released in the United Kingdom in October on RCA. And Kate Miller-Heidke reached No. 2 on the ARIA albums chart with her second Sony album, "Curiouser," and had a global viral hit on YouTube with "Are You F*cking Kidding Me? (The Facebook Song)," which appeared on a five-song SIN/RED EP in October in the United States.

The business backdrop for this talent in action is encouraging. The economy has performed better than expected (1% growth in gross domestic product reported in the first half), thanks in part to the government's stimulus packages. In April, the government handed out as much as $950 Australian ($861) to 13 million Australians as an incentive to spur growth at retail and stem job losses.

The handout benefited the Australian entertainment and electronics retailer JB Hi-Fi. The music market-leading chain is in expansion mode and forecasting 20% sales growth to $2.8 billion Australian ($2.5 billion) in the financial year that will end June 30, 2010. "Unlike in other countries, we haven't had a big downturn here," JB CEO Richard Uechtritz says, "and Australians' love affair with technology is insatiable." JB dominates its retail rivals with an estimated 40% share of the CD market.

The signs of recovery are good, but no one is celebrating just yet.

"It's a tough retail environment," says David Williams, chairman of the leading independent music group Shock Entertainment. "But we expect digital to continue expanding dramatically at the expense of physical retail."

Williams' comments are reflected by Steve Pavlovic, managing director of Modular Recordings, the Sydney-based label home to Wolfmother, Cut Copy, Ladyhawke and others.

"Some of our artists would have sold a lot more records with the same amount of attention five or 10 years ago," Pavlovic says. "But there are some outstanding opportunities opening up for artists, there's a lot of great music coming out of Australia. And we're happy, the sun is shining." ••••

FRONTIER MAN

For Mushroom's Michael Gudinski, Tour Promotion Remains His 'Fun Job'

As a pioneer of the Australian music business, Michael Gudinski was into 360 deals before they were called "360." But rather than attempt to tap into different artist revenue streams because a central revenue source was faltering, Gudinski's motives were more entrepreneurial in building a fledgling music business Down Under.

Gudinski, founder/chairman of the Mushroom Group of Cos., will deliver a keynote at MIDEM Jan. 26, which coincides with Australia Day, a national holiday.

This year marks the 30th anniversary of Gudinski's company Frontier Touring, which among other accomplishments was among the first promoters to pair Billy Joel and Elton John as co-headliners and the first to tour Bob Dylan with Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers across Australia and New Zealand in 1986.

Gudinski formed Mushroom Records in 1972 but had begun booking artists in the region years earlier. In 1970, he established the Consolidated Rock agency, which evolved into the Premier Artist/Harbour Agency Group and remains a powerful booking agency in the region.

In partnership with others, including Frank Stivala, Philip Jacobsen and Ian James, Gudinski has diversified his portfolio to include festivals, venues, concert promoting, merchandising (ARM) and publishing (Mushroom Music Publishing).

Branching into other areas was instinctive for Gudinski. "Because it's a small country here, we didn't have antitrust laws like in America back in the '70s, so I basically had set up what people would look at now as the original 360 type of operation," he says. "Now you have all these people talking 360, which I really don't like. I think unless you have someone actively doing something in an area, to take someone's rights is wrong."

But the live business has always been Gudinski's first love. "Touring has always been the exciting side of the business for me, and not just because of the obvious excitement of a show and the risk involved," he says. "It keeps me in touch. You're out on the road, you're talking to bands. I used to always say the record company was my day job and the touring company was my fun job."

Fun and still successful, as Frontier this year has brought such acts as Kings of Leon, the Black Eyed Peas, Leonard Cohen, MGMT, Rise Against and Fall Out Boy to Australia and New Zealand. His Day on the Green music fests at Australian wineries have become hugely popular.

Frontier first started to gain traction by bringing in new music exploding out of England to Australia, including such bands as the Police and Squeeze.

"We started working with bands that some the established promoters weren't taking ser ously, so we sort of came in through the late '7( with that music style," he says. "But today we' very diverse. We're very conscious of trying put special bills together—we're very concerne with value for money. If the live music busine doesn't protect the fans and the core of what th business is all about, they will end up doing e actly what the record business did—outpricin and outsmarting themselves."

The dynamics of the music business hav
"completely swapped" since he started, Gudi ski says. "It used to be you toured to promo your record. Now it's almost like you record promote your tours. When I started, a record w much more expensive than a live concert tick and it has completely flipped the other way."

Gudinski stresses the importance of workir with developing acts.

"I just can't say how important it is to wo with new artists, not just sit back on the b multiple arena acts, because new artists are t future of the business," he says. "It's an inte esting time at the moment when you look a handful of gigantic superstars out there. B where are the next handful of superstars cor ing from?"

One of the major challenges for promoti tours in Australia is the volatility of the Australi dollar when most international acts prefer to paid in American currency.

"We went through a period last year whe
the dollar dropped like 35 cents in week Gudinski says. "On a $10 million tour that's few million dollars."

At MIDEM, Gudinski plans to talk about h promoters are playing a much bigger role artists' careers, such as investing capital in a d veloping act "so you can withstand all the b guys trying to rub you out the minute the ba happens," he says. "It will be a pretty intere
ing chat."

Concert Business Was In The Pink In 2009

BY LARS BRANDLE

Down Under debut: BRITNEY SPEARS plays 14 shows this month on her first tour of Australia.

Australian concertgoers have enjoyed a lot of choice for their buck lately. The likes of Coldplay, Andre Rieu, Green Day, the Black Eyed Peas, Nickelback and Britney Spears all embarked on Australian tours in 2009. None, however, could touch Pink's extraordinary 58-date trek, which sold 658,000 tickets and grossed more than $80 million Australian ($74 million), a record for a touring female artist Down Under.

"Achieving that level of ticket sales in a recession environment confirms that Australians value great entertainment above pretty much anything else that they could spend their disposable income on," says Michael Coppel, whose Melbourne-based company Michael Coppel Presents promoted the tour.

"No question our market responds to hit international acts," says Paul Dainty, CEO/chairman of Dainty Consolidated Entertainment, which is promoting 14 shows by Spears this month on her first Australian tour. "The market has been very strong through 2009 despite the economic issues, which have been tame [here] compared to the rest of the world."

However, the wildly fluctuating dollar rate has affected promoters. The U.S. value of the local dollar has swung from as low as 60 cents in October 2008 to as high as 92 cents a year later.

"The fluctuating dollar is a nightmare," says Ming Gan, cofounder of the Parklife festival tour, which sold out 130,000 tickets across five cities from Sept. 26 to Oct. 5. "This year I did all my contracts in Australian dollars, and the Aussie dollar has gone up, which meant I missed out on a windfall."

Australia's live entertainment sector in 2008 generated $1.1 billion Australian ($978 million) in revenue and shifted 15.8 million tickets (of which 2 million were continued on >>p32 from >>p30 complimentary), according to the latest "Ticket Attendance and Revenue Survey" of the trade group Live Performance Australia. Although the market was well down from its peaks of $1.3 billion Australian ($1.1 billion) and 20.8 million tickets in 2007, LPA CEO Evelyn Richardson is heartened by the health of the business and says the dip is part of a natural cycle in the industry. Admittedly, the LPA's survey doesn't yet capture much data from regional venues and self-ticketed events, and the festival business is still underreported.

"Business is going along quite well, but I wouldn't say business is booming," says Michael Harrison, tour coordinator for Frontier Touring, which promoted Kings of Leon, the Black Eyed Peas and Leonard Cohen in 2009. "There's renewed confidence in the market that the worst times are over. We're moving ahead."

That's not true, however, for veteran impresario Kevin Jacobsen, who blamed "the volatility of the entertainment market" when his company Arena Management ceased doing business in July with debts in the region of $10 million Australian ($9.2 million). Arena Management's prized asset, the 12,500-capacity Sydney Entertainment Centre, is now run by the team from the neighboring Sydney Convention and Exhibition Centre.

Meanwhile, Australian promoters are using some new tools to do business in the digital age. Michael Chugg Entertainment promoted its Australasian Pearl Jam tour (running through November) with a series of video exclusives streamed on the new PearlJam.tv site. And Michael Gudinski's Frontier Touring re launched its Web presence incorporating in teractive and social elements. "The Interne is the radio station for the 21st century," Michael Chugg says. "There's a whole new world of promotional opportunity out there for promoters."

DIGITAL TOOLS, FROM EXCLUSIVE VIDEOS TO NEW WEB SITES, ARE HELPING SELL CONCERT TICKETS.

The festival scene remains a thriving mar ket, dominated by the six-city Australasian Big Day Out tour. The 2009 edition, which ran from Jan. 16 to Feb. 1, sold more than 263,000 tickets, down slightly from the 282,692 sold in 2008. For the first time all tickets to the five 201 dates sold out within two weeks of going on sale. Other festival brands including Homebake, Falls Festival and Splendour in the Grass also sold out in 2009. However some promoters warn that the festival mar ket is at a saturation point. The shortfall in ticket sales for the Sept. 18 Blueprint Festival in regional Victoria, which has reportedly ac crued debts of $500,000 Australian ($461,000) would suggest the market isn't a sure thing.

Overall, the live sector is enjoying goo times. "Business has been very strong," say Don Elford, business development manager a Sydney's 21,000-capacity Acer Arena, operate by the leading venue group AEG Ogden. "Th younger demographic seems to be stronge but the older demographic seems to be mor cautious with their money these days. Overal I'd have to say the Australian music busines is pretty strong."

Otherworldly: 30 SECONDS TO MARS

'WAR' MACHINE

30 Seconds To Mars Gets Its Fans Involved On 'This Is War'

Plenty of artists pay lip service to loving their fans, but usually limit their interaction to meet-and-greets, replying to tweets and shout-outs from the stage. But 30 Seconds to Mars, which is about to release its third album, "This Is War," Dec. 8 on Virgin, goes far beyond the usual platitudes and gestures. The band involved its fans, known as "the Echelon," on a number of aspects of the new album, including them in choruses and putting their pictures on the album cover.

Lead singer Jared Leto says the group spent two years writing and recording the album, working in the studio with producers Flood and Steve Lillywhite. "The album is a quantum leap forward," Leto says. "I describe it as a metamorphosis, nothing short of a complete rediscovery."

30 Seconds to Mars' previous album, "A Beautiful Lie," which was released in 2005, has sold 1.2 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. While "This Is War" certainly represents an artistic step forward for the band, it hasn't completely given up its melodic, hard rock leanings. "I don't ever wonder about what people will think when we get in the studio," Leto says. "I have to follow my heart and my gut and not worry about outside influences."

"This Is War" contains plenty of battle metaphors, with such lyrics as "Tell me who you'd kill to save a life." The band also makes excellent use of strings, and varied song arrangements save the album from sounding too much like a didactic lecture. The group includes choirs on almost every track, and Leto explains that members of the choruses are fans from around the world.

"We were intent on turning the mic toward the audience," he says. "We started to hold events we called 'the Summit'; we did one in L.A. at the Avalon and the place was full. We wound up doing eight of them in different cities, and then we started getting requests from fans that couldn't make it to the summits to participate. We launched a digital version, and we used the material to create the choruses."

Fans also were able to submit photos of themselves online, and Leto says the pictures were used to design several album covers that fans can choose from. "We know that retail is shifting from physical to digital," he says. "We wanted to celebrate the transition and make the physical release really important."

EMI executive VP of promotion and marketing Greg Thompson says fans will participate in marketing "This Is War" as well. "This is a band that was built by passionate fans," he says. "They have been doing a lot of the viral marketing themselves, preaching the gospel to their friends and families."

Thompson says the campaign to spread the word about the new album will also include many more traditional elements. "We introduced the first single, 'Kings and Queens,' to radio, and it's exploded at modern rock and active rock," he says. The song is No. 5 on Billboard's Alternative chart and No. 11 on the Rock tally.

The band is planning on playing a number of European shows in November before returning to the United States to play holiday radio shows. A full U.S. tour is planned for 2010.

"We're also pursuing licensing opportunities more vigorously," Thompson says. "It's an epic album, and the sound certainly isn't right for everyone. But we have great success with videogames. For instance, with the game 'Dragon Age,' you get a free download with the purchase of the game. And tracks are also available in the 'Rock Band' online store."

While much has been made of Leto's acting career and the perception of him as a celebrity with the band as a side project, Thompson says "This Is War" should dispel any lingering notions that the singer is a dilettante. "It's a harder journey for someone who acts to break into music than the other way around," he says. "But Jared is totally committed to making it all about the band. At this point, fans see him as the lead singer who just happens to act."

Pulling An All-Nighter

For Puddle Of Mudd, Lack Of Sleep Leads To An Abundance Of Hits

It's 5 a.m., and while most of his neighbors in Los Angeles sleep, Puddle of Mudd frontman Wes Scantlin is lounging on his couch with an acoustic guitar, a six-pack of beer and a small recording device to capture new song ideas for his rock band.

His early-bird method of songwriting has proved to be successful at radio. Since Puddle of Mudd's 2001 debut album, "Come Clean," the group has had five No. 1 songs on Billboard's Mainstream Rock chart, tied for second-most this decade with 3 Doors Down, Godsmack and Linkin Park.

But some of those hits have come at the expense of a concerned wife, who often comes down the stairs at about 4:30 a.m. to ask Scantlin, "When are you coming to bed? Are you ever coming to bed—ever?" he recalls with a laugh.

But Scantlin knows how to make the best of the situation. On Puddle of Mudd's fourth studio set, "Volume 4: Songs in the Key of Love & Hate," due Dec. 8 on Flawless/Geffen, the musician used his wife's complaints as inspiration for the song "Pitchin' a Fit." "She's my little muse," he says, noting that new track "Keep It Together" is another love song written for her. "I get a song out of any mood that my wife is in."

In contrast, the first single from "Volume 4"—the follow-up to 2007's "Famous," which has sold 363,000 copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan—is the sexually charged rocker "Spaceship." The track is No. 11 on Mainstream Rock, No. 11 on Active Rock, No. 15 on Heritage Rock and No. 33 on Alternative. "Spaceship" premiered on AOL Music's Noisecreep blog in mid-October and has sold 10,000 downloads, according to SoundScan.

Interscope/Geffen marketing director Matt LaMotte says his primary goal with "Volume 4" is to bring out Puddle of Mudd's personality and charisma to a digital audience. "Just about everyone has a Puddle of Mudd song in their iTunes library," he says. "But I'm not sure that all of those people subscribe to the mailing list or go to their Web site regularly."

In addition to constant Twitter updates from Puddle of Mudd members, the first step in galvanizing the band's online fan base was releasing teaser clips of the video for "Spaceship"—which features the band with cast members from MTV's "Nitro Circus" traveling the galaxy in search of alien girls—in the days leading up to its Nov. 16 debut on Yahoo Music.

Puddle of Mudd's team also hopes to boost the band's TV exposure in 2010. The group is scheduled to perform Jan. 7 on "Jimmy Kimmel Live!" and is currently negotiating other late-night bookings. LaMotte says the act will also be marketed heavily at sporting events for brands like the NFL, UFC and NASCAR.

"We have a heavy street initiative going out to the sports crowd, handing out Puddle of Mudd beer koozies and bottle openers," he says. "That crowd likes this band already and would like to have some material like that."

"Volume 4" will also be promoted through a North American package tour that will visit small arenas in January and February, according to Prospect Park senior VP of music Peter Katsis, who co-manages Puddle of Mudd with Bill McGathy.

Meanwhile, Scantlin says he's already busy working on the group's next album.

He collaborated with his bandmates—including guitarist Paul Phillips, who rejoined the band in February after leaving in 2005—for several songs on "Volume 4." And he's willing to do it again for future material—if, of course, they can stay up past their bedtime. ••••

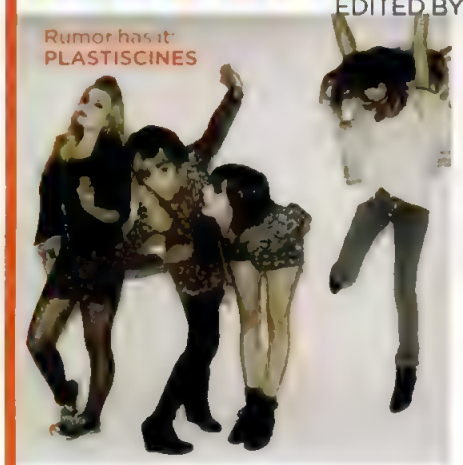
Intocable Fuses Past And Present On New Album

There's a hidden gem at the end of "Classic," the 13th album by Texas norteño group Intocable. The album covers a nostalgic collection of sentimental, accordion-packed songs made popular decades ago in a traditional, simple style. But wait just long enough and you'll hear why legions of fans have stuck with Intocable for 15 years. The last track, "Estamos En Algo," veers into psychedelic funk and ska in a way that no other commercially successful group in the regional Mexican genre would dare try.



Intocable has always set itself apart musically from its peers by fusing touches of other styles, particularly country and rock, into its sound. For "Classic," out Dec. 1 on Sony Music Latin, Intocable teamed with legendary accordionist Ramón Ayala and covered songs Ayala recorded decades ago with his former band, Los Relámpagos del Norte. But even as Intocable looks back to the music its members grew up on, it's exploring completely new territory in its contract with Sony.

Intocable toured with Ayala earlier in its career, but this is the first time they have worked together on production. The result is a faithful re-creation o

French band Plastiscines' attempt to conquer the United States is up and running, with two recent cameo performances and a synch in the CW TV show "Gossip Girl."

The Paris-based female quartet is one of the first signings to U.S. indie Nylon Records with its second set, "About Love," which appears elsewhere on Paris label Because.

Plastiscines' 2007 debut album, "LP1" (Virgin), failed to chart in France, but has sold 20,000 copies, band manager Maxime Schmit says. The act sub sequently exite the Virgin fold but reckoning it mainly English language punk pop-rock migh travel well, Schmit says, it "took th risk to go to th U.S. at the begin ning of 2009" to re cord "About Love.

Butch Walke (Avril Lavigne, Pink, Simpl Plan) produced the new se adding what Schmitt calls "a 'international hit' touch" to th 12-song album, which was re leased Aug. 4 in the Unite States. Schmitt declines to dis cuss initial sales, insisting th band has a long-term strateg "We are building an image," h says. he sweet, simple songs that In-ocable used to play when its gigs were weddings and quinceañeras. "My dad had the original albums and I remem-ber listening to them," lead singer Ricky Muñoz says.

Like Muñoz's own band, Los Relámpagos were known for putting their own spin on norteño music in the '60s. "They were the first norteño band to have an actual drum set in the band," Muñoz says. "And when we came into the scene we were innovators as well . . . we're used to experimenting with our music and our influ-ences. In this case we're explor-ing our influences, but it's strictly back to the roots."

On the business side, how-ever, Intocable is focused on the future. When its contract with EMI was up, the band began looking for a more flex-ible, equitable arrangement; Intocable formed its own label, Good-I, and had planned to re-lease future albums independ-ently. The band had even secured favorable pricing and positioning at Wal-Mart, in-cluding a "Soundcheck" play (though the album wasn't ex-clusive to the retailer). "We cut some aggressive deals with distributors to make sure that our music got out there," In-tocable manager Alan Baxter says. Those deals remain, even as Intocable licensed "Classic" to Sony Music Latin.

Baxter says that rather than licensing the album to Sony pan-regionally, Intocable nego-tiated separate agreements with Sony Music Latin in the United States and Sony Music Mexico. "One encompassing deal doesn't make sense for us," Baxter says. "The cost of mar-keting and promotion is differ-ent, record sales are different . . . we are looking at each ter-ritory as a different opportunity for partners." Intocable will also put the video for "Hay Ojitos" up for sale on its own.

Intocable's deal with Sony, which doesn't include touring, is "more than a license. It's a partnership," Muñoz says. "If we win, we both win. If we lose, we both lose."

Sony Music Latin VP of marketing and A&R Nir Seroussi adds, "Whatever we both bring to the table we split halfway. It's not your typical five-album deal. It's more of an open-ended deal."

So far, so good: First single "Hay Ojitos" had the fastest rise to No. 1 on Billboard's Re-gional Mexican Airplay chart this year and the fastest since Intocable's "Tu Adios No Mata" debuted on the chart at No. 1 last year. "Hay Ojitos" re-turns to No. 1 this week.

"It was time for a change," Muñoz says. Under its new label deal, "the excitement is there." ••••

>>>GUN HAPPY

A U.K. band named after a U.S. R&B record that utilizes a Hong Kong-born vocalist just got even more international.

Mamas Gun—named after Erykah Badu's 2000 album and fronted by Kowloon-born writer/producer Andy Platts—has enjoyed early success in Japan, where its debut single, "House on a Hill" (Tearbridge/Avex), hit No. 3 on Billboard's Japanese Hot 100 Nov. 9. That followed the Japanese release of its debut album, "Routes to Riches," Oct. 26. It appeared in the United Kingdom Sept. 28 on Candelion/Absolute.

A fan of classic Motown, acid jazz and Jamiroquai, Platts describes it as "a kalei-doscope of a record that trav-els through genres. The one thing it tries to keep is the eu-phoria of soul music." The album is scheduled for a late-January release in the Nether-lands and in Germany, where Mamas Gun opened for do-mestic hip-hop act Die Fan-tastichen Vier in front of 60,000 people in Stuttgart in September.

Mamas Gun is supporting the U.K. soul singer Beverley Knight on a British tour. It's booked by Helter Skelter and has Japanese shows booked at the Billboard Live venues in Tokyo (Jan. 29-30) and Osaka (Feb. 1). Publishers, which vary by territory, include Imagem (United Kingdom) and Univer-sal Music Publishing (Japan).

6 QUESTIONS with STING

by MONICA HERRERA

Sting's "If on a Winter's Night . . ." may feature holiday-inspired songs, but don't call it a Christ-mas album. "The whole season is much broader than that," he says. "Winter is about inspira-tion and imagination."

While culling source material for "Winter's Night"—which debuted at No. 6 on the Billboard 200 and has sold 139,000 copies since its Oct. 26 release, according to Nielsen SoundScan—Sting found inspiration in everything from a 14th-century carol ("Gabriel's Message") to tradi-tional lullabies and poems. He also collaborated with a host of musicians from the British Isles and performed with the ensemble at England's Durham Cathedral in a concert that will be broadcast Thanksgiving night on PBS' "Great Performances" and released Nov. 23 on DVD.

1 How did you decide on the concept for "If on a Winter's Night . . ."?

It was during last winter that I decided I would do an album based on the season. It has this kind of gravitational pull toward one's roots—the family home, the cradle or church—but a lot of people face it without any of those things. The sadness of not being able to go home is probably encapsulated best in "Christmas at Sea," which is based on a 19th-century Robert Louis Stevenson poem about a sailor who is sinking off the coast and realizes his home is on the cliff top. He's pulled toward home, yet he's in terrible danger. That sums up the am-biguous feeling of this record. It's not entirely happy, and I also avoided symbols that I think have been overused, like Santa Claus or Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.

2 What was it like recording with such a large group of musicians?

My first instinct was to look for traditional mu-sicians from north of England: Kathryn Tick-ell, who plays the Northumbrian pipes; her brother, Peter, who plays the fiddle; and the Melodeon player Julian Sutton are all from my hometown. We started recording in my house in Italy last January. We sat around the kitchen table with the fire on, huddled up with coats and scarves and explored these songs together. It was like method recording—it had to be cold for us to begin this thing.

3 Many of the songs on "Winter's Night" are deeply rooted in Christian themes. Did you have to reconcile your own agnosti-cism with recording nonsecular material?

I was brought up in the church, and the Chris-tian story is part of my background. At the same time, I can't really accept a lot of the el-ements of those stories as articles of faith. I think there is one true unassailable religion, and that is the human ability to tell stories—to make myth of why we're here and what we do. So I put those Christian stories next to pre-Christian stories. I treated them with a great deal of reverence and respect. But again, I'm not singing articles of faith; I'm singing magical stories.

4 Your daughter recently said in an in-terview that your practice of tantric sex is just a myth. What's the real story?

People get very silly about what tantra is. It's using your normal life as a de-votional practice, which includes breathing, walking, eating, being and making love. All of those things are practiced consciously, and that's re-ally what it's about. Music is my tantra. It's my way of saying "thank you" to anything, whatever it may be.

5 What was it like reuniting with the Police through last year?

We tied up a lot of loose ends with the last Police tour. I was glad I did it, and people were very happy to see us to-gether again. They came out in droves to see us play. It was an exercise in nostalgia, but we don't need to keep repeating that. I need to be doing something new all the time.

6 Would you like to make an-other concept album?

I don't know, we'll see how this one does. It's an interesting way of work-ing, collecting or writing material around one theme rather than just writing songs. But if you said to me, "Are you going to do spring next?" No, that would be far too expected. ••••

DASHBOARD CONFESSIONAL

Alter the Ending
Producers: Butch Walker, Adam Schlesinger Interscope
Release Date: Nov. 10

Dashboard Confessional frontman Chris Carrabba could likely take his pick of any female fan in the audience. But somehow the singer/songwriter always manages to get his heart broken by the opposite sex. The band's sixth studio album, "Alter the Ending," is a perfectly blended concoction of acoustic melodies, graceful harmonies and powerful anthems wrapped around the story of a man trying desperately to save a failing relationship. The pounding drums on the opener, "Get Me Right," emphasizes Carrabba's pursuit of love, while the heavy title track finds him pleading with the object of his affection to stay. And on the closer, "Hell on the Throat," the artist sings about loss and acceptance over simple acoustic chords. "Alter the Ending" displays much of the same raw insecurities that Carrabba has become known for, but it also shows emotional growth, as heard on "Water and Bridges," where he sings, "I'll make the best of the best I can, and I'll be better for it if I ever get my chance."—CB

SAY ANYTHING

Say Anything
Producer: Neal Avron
RCA Records
Release Date: Nov. 3

Pop-punk band Say Anything's new self-titled album reflects the changing life of frontman Max Bemis—he is now married (wife Sherri DuPree guests on the songs "She Won't Follow You" and "Cemetery"), has converted to Christianity (referenced in the upbeat single "Hate Everyone") and hasn't suffered bipolar relapses that have previously derailed tours. Life has settled down for Bemis, but it doesn't show on the new set. Taking a cue from painter Jackson Pollock, the artist splatters pieces of his influences and experiences across an audio canvas for listeners to interpret. "Do Better" leans on strings and electronics to create a musical takeover (Bemis sings, "We could do better/We could be the greatest band in the world"), while "Less Cute" features horns during the verse that lead into a rocking chorus. The chaos is nothing new for Say Anything, but the band's newest release is tightly executed and gives fans a deeper look into Bemis' clever mind.—ECJ

NORAH JONES

The Fall
Producer: Jacquire King
Blue Note Records
Release Date: Nov. 17

Norah Jones' fourth album, "The Fall," may surprise some of her die-hard fans, or at least disarm them a bit. During the 13-song set, Jones ditches the gentle piano-playing of her previous work and rises to a new level of creative boldness. With a new group of musicians behind her, Jones incorporates a fresh, beat-savvy sensibility into these noir-like arrangements, playing plenty of electric guitar and exploring the piercing quality of Wurlitzer electric piano. Jones adopts a smoky voice and soulful veneer for the opening track and first single, "Chasing Pirates," while displaying a slinky kind of ambience on "Light As a Feather (co-written with Ryan Adams). The social commentary "It's Gonna Be" offers a garage-rock attitude, and "You've Ruined Me" has a rich Americana flavor. But Jones is still a little bit country ("Tell Yer Mama") and a little bit rock'n'roll ("Stuck"). Overall, the artist straddles those lines in an entirely different manner than she ever has before.—GG

Rihanna may have been a good girl gone bad on her 2007 album, but on her new one, she's a good girl gone bad-ass. During the electric-guitar-soused "Rock Star," the R&B singer revels in her bad-girl rebellion, crooning, "Got my middle finger up/I don't really give a fuck." And over double-speed drums on "G4L," she warns, "Any motherfuckers want to disrespect/We don't play that shit." Meanwhile, the singles "Wait Your Turn" and "Hard" find Rihanna singing beefy lyrics—"I'm such a fucking lady" and "the hottest bitch in heels," respectively—over epic piano patterns. But the artist doesn't talk tough all the way through the set. "Photographs" features Rihanna lamenting over a lost relationship above static drums, whereas on the heartfelt ballad "Stupid in Love," she croons over a pulsating beat, "You don't know what you lost/And you won't realize it till I'm gone." In either case, she proves that the good girl in her has gone bad indefinitely.—MC

Producer: Ryan Leslie
NextSelection/Universal Motown
Release Date: Nov. 3

Nearly nine months after the release of his self-titled album, Ryan Leslie continues to push the envelope musically, penning even more lustful lyrics, delivering sweet melodies and creating captivating productions. On "Something That I Like" (featuring Pusha T), the production—reminiscent of rap group Clipse's "We Got It for Cheap"—meshes with the soulful chorus, in which he confesses, "She's got something that I like." Over hand claps and a psychedelic piano arrangement, Leslie keeps "Zodiac" fresh with flirty lyrics like, "What's your zodiac sign/Are we compatible, baby?/If it matches with mine/Then we should think about dating." Other standout tracks include the horn-laden "Sunday Night," about spending a quiet evening with a special lady; "All My Love," with its sluggish beat and erratic drums; and the heart-pounding closer "I Choose You," which can be ideal for any wedding day.—MC

Fantasia
Producer: Homero Patron
Fonovisa
Release Date: Oct. 27

Young crooner Ivan's "Fantasia" is a throwback to '70s and '80s grupero, a Mexican genre that spawned some of Latin music's most enduring acts and classic songs. Grupero straddles pop and regional Mexican, offering hopelessly romantic ballads and mid-tempo cumbias. Production maestro Homero Patron, who is a veteran of the genre, impeccably re-creates the retro sounds on "Fantasia," a covers album by the runner-up of reality competition "Objetivo Fama." While Ivan has real vocal chops, it's unclear whether music fans his age will embrace grupero redux; less sappy song choices might have presented him better to younger listeners. A Spanish-language version of the '60s oldie "Angel of the Morning" is a particularly fun exception.—ABY

BIG KENNY

The Quiet Times of a Rock and Roll Farm Boy
Producers: Big Kenny, Chris Stone
Glotown/Love Everybody/Bigger Picture
Release Date: Nov. 10

In many ways, Big Kenny and John Rich—who make up country duo Big & Rich—are the perfect couple. But Big Kenny's new album, "The Quiet Times of a Rock and Roll Farm Boy," is a thoughtful, often profound sojourn into musical independence—his former major label reportedly rejected every solo project he turned in. That frustration led to the defiant "Free Like Me," which warns, "Don't fit me inside your expectations/You'll never know everything I can be." Big Kenny's musical kinship with Rich is evident on "Wake Up," in which the singer demonstrates moving poetry and surprisingly head-turning lead vocals. The lead single, "Long After I'm Gone," is a midtempo stop-and-smell-the-roses anthem, while "To Find a Heart" may well be the album's sleeper hit. Sonically, "Farm Boy" puts the artist's influences on intriguing display (he cites Merle Haggard, Willie Nelson, the Beatles, Queen, Bob Marley and Bill Withers, among others), yet manages the often elusive feat of a cohesive, articulate and entertaining experience from first note to last.—WJ

NIRVANA

Bleach (20th-anniversary deluxe edition)

Producer: Jack Endino

Sub Pop Records

Release Date: Nov. 3

"This is off our first record, most people don't own it," Kurt Cobain whispered before strumming the opening chords of "About a Girl" during Nirvana's 1993 "MTV Unplugged" performance. As Cobain had guessed, most audience members probably weren't aware that the solemn track was from the band's 1989 debut, "Bleach." Unlike Nirvana's more polished, alternative-leaning breakthrough, 1991's "Nevermind," the sludgy backwoods material on "Bleach" reveals the humble beginnings of a band that would lead a new musical movement and earn itself a place in rock'n'roll history. Twenty years after its original release on Sub Pop, "Bleach" is freshened up with remastered versions of unusually heavy songs like the haunting "Negative Creep," where Cobain howls about alienation and being stoned, and the pounding "Floyd the Barber," where the main subject of the eerie track is a man being strapped down and tortured by characters from "The Andy Griffith Show." The set also includes a feedback-heavy live set from a 1990 performance at the Pine Street Theatre in Portland, Ore., where Nirvana tightly crushes through songs from "Bleach" and early rarities like "Spank Thru" and "Sappy."—MP

Robin Thicke delivers his signature smooth talk on "Sex Therapy," the first single from his as-yet-untitled fourth album. Producers Polow Da Don and Hot Sauce set up a languorous backbeat with understated synths and soft drum kicks, while Thicke turns the heat all the way up. "Stressed out, uptight, overworked, wound up/Unleash what you got, let's explore your naughty side," the singer croons. "Just let me love you, lay right here, I'll be your fantasy/Give you sex therapy." The come-hither lyrics, accompanied by Thicke's breathy falsetto and deep bass undertones, give the song an unforced eroticism that feels ideal for lovers of romance. Thicke's stripped-down brand of R&B is of an ultra-suggestive nature, but his earnest vocal performance is what ultimately keeps it classy.—KP

Pop music has seen its share of vocalists attempt to play guitar, but few do so as successfully as Orianthi, who shreds and sings with equal aplomb. The 24-year-old Australian was set to play alongside Michael Jackson on his "This Is It" residency, then follow up with "Believe," her debut album released last month. Though the high-profile gig fell through, her album's lead single, "According to You," continues to power Orianthi's career forward. Producer Howard Benson (P.O.D., Daughtry) builds a rock-solid framework around co-songwriters Steve Diamond and Andrew Frampton's lyrics and Orianthi's lively vocal and instrumental chops, leading to a striking guitar climax. Help Me (3:57)

Producer: Latin Bitman

Writers: J. A. Bravo, F. Valenzuela

Publishers: Canciones Nacionales, Warner/Chappell Nacional

For the lead single from his new album "Colour," Latin Bitman finds a talented co-writer and guest vocalist in fellow Chilean artist Francisca Valenzuela, who moans bleak lyrics that tint the song with an appealing despondency. "I'm hitting bottom," Valenzuela sings to a falling bassline. "Help me find out how to break the mold," she beckons soulfully, while an electric funk guitar and saxophone take agitated stabs back and forth, trying to break through the track's rolling loops. The production mixes buoyancy with heft, as Bitman allows dub upbeats to rebound off a weighted hip-hop backbeat. The song's main riff drops in and out, revealing a playful subtext of timbales and turntable scratches. The lyrics are a call for signs of life in a dreary city, and the music, always in motion, awakens just that.—SG

"I was always wrong, and I just didn't want to see it," she sings in Spanish. "Because for you I gave my life/Because everything that begins also ends." After a string of dance-pop singles that aimed for a crossover audience, it's refreshing to hear Thalía pull back and tackle a downtempo number with a classic feel, particularly in a live setting that allows her to showcase her vocals. Thalía recently posted a YouTube clip of herself in the studio with Aventura recording a bachata version of "Equivocada," a sign that her latest hit could find radio success in more ways than one.—MH

The saying goes: If it isn't broken, don't fix it. That seems to be the strategy Jay Sean and his team employed by releasing "Do You Remember" as the second single off his "All or Nothing" album. Much like his recent Billboard Hot 100 No. 1 "Down," "Remember" finds Sean avowing his desire for love. "Just you and me tonight, everything will be OK/Baby let's take this time, let's make new memories," he sings over similar brusque violin strings and drums. Sean also goes into cyclical mode on the chorus, looping the title and the phrase "Let's bring it back" over and over as on "Down." There are some modifications to the formula, however, like the all-too-familiar ad-libs by Lil Jon. The rapper/producer guests alongside Sean Paul, who adds a pleasant reggae twist.—MC

Omarion Launches Imprint For New Album After Split With Young Money

When Omarion sings, "I done cut the braids, low cut, got my grown on," in a raspy croon on his new single "I Get It In," he's referencing a turning point in his career.

"I felt like my braids defined who I was, and there's so much more to me," says the 25-year-old singer, who—in the wake of Ludacris and Mario—shed his signature hairstyle in July. "I'm not a kid in the industry anymore; I have a sense of self."

"I Get It In" is No. 26 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart and No. 18 on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop. The track, which features a cameo by in-demand rapper Gucci Mane, provides a solid setup for the former B2K singer's third solo album. Due Jan. 12, "Ollusion" will be released on the artist's own Starworld Entertainment imprint through EMI Label Services.

"It's the first record I've put out since [2005's] 'Touch' that has a high-energy dance vibe," Omarion says. "I have a new look and my own label now, so it felt like the right way to kick things off."

Omarion, whose real name is Omari Grandberry, recently released a choreography-laden music video for "I Get It In." His second single will be a song he co-produced with four-person production team 253. Titled "Speed'n," the midtempo number recalls past hits "O" and "Ice Box." The singer adds, "It's got that classic Omarion feel."

Other standout tracks include "Hoodie," a boastful jam featuring Jay Rock, and "What Do You Say," a ballad Omarion cowrote with his friend Chris Brown.

In early August, the future of "Ollusion" and Omarion's label home looked unclear. The singer's deal with Young Money fell through two weeks after label founder Lil Wayne introduced him at a concert, sparking rumors that he was dropped. This followed an earlier split from Timbaland, who was originally set to produce and release Omarion's new album under his Interscope-distributed Mosley Music Group.

"Timbaland had so much on his plate," Omarion recalls. "And when I saw I couldn't have the relationship I wanted to have with him, I knew it wasn't the home for me. With Young Money, it was getting close to the end of the year, and I wanted to build momentum for the first quarter. Wayne had other plans, though . . . he's the captain of his ship."

Those events could have easily derailed another artist's career. Yet Omarion pushed ahead, striking a new deal with EMI by late September.

"Everyone was speculating that I was out for the count," he says, "but I never sweat. Stepping out as an entrepreneur was the smartest thing I could do."

"Now we have Omarion the artist and Omari the boss," says Cheryl Trimmer, who previously worked with the singer's manager Chris Stokes and is now president of Starworld. "He wouldn't have been able to wear both hats at Young Money."

Omarion already has a stable of acts under Starworld: one female and one male solo singer, a singing group and a male rapper, whom he'll likely introduce while touring in support of "Ollusion."

"You'll start to see his artists roll out in the fourth quarter of next year," Trimmer says. "Right now the focus is getting him established where he needs to be."

Omarion says he's ready for the challenge, noting that he's been especially determined to take his career to the next level ever since his idol, Michael Jackson, died. "I was sitting at his funeral next to Chris [Brown]," he recalls, "and I just had this moment where I said to myself, 'I have to step up to the plate now and drive myself further than I've ever gone before.' HOLIDAY CHEER

Billboard's seasonal Top Holiday Songs chart makes its annual return to our chart menu this wee (see billboard.biz/charts). The tally lists the week's most popular seasonal songs, ranked by radi airplay detections on Nielsen BDS-monitored AC stations. ¶ After Thanksgiving, many AC statior flip to an all-holiday songs format, and by Christmas, nearly three-quarters of the monitored AC ou lets are playing nothing but seasonal hits. In recent years, stations have moved to the all-holiday fo mat earlier than usual. Because of this, Top Holiday Songs bows this week, reflecting data for th week ending Nov. 15. ¶ The chart will continue to be compiled through the end of the year, when st tions return to their normal programming. J.K. Hitmakers The Cribs Welcome Johnny Marr To The Fold ince the release of their third album, 2007's "Men's leeds, Women's Needs, Whatever," the Cribs have uilt a fervent U.K following. Now the band hopes › mirror that fervor in the United States. Paving ıe way is its second Warner Bros. release, "Ignore ıe Ignorant." It's the group's first album with new ıember Johnny Marr—co-founder of '80s group the Smiths, a member of '90s duo Electronic and guitarist for Modest Mouse.

Released stateside Nov. 10, "Ignore the Ignorant" became the Cribs' highest-charting album in the United Kingdom, reaching No. 8 on the Official Charts Co. tally. While the group's 2004 self-titled debut and 2005 follow-up, "The New Fellas," failed to dent the U.K. list, "Men's Needs" peaked at No. 13. To date, the Wakefield, Yorkshire, band has scored seven U.K. top 40 singles.

Fervent following:
THE CRIBS

The addition of Marr in summer 2008 "brings out a different side of us," says Cribs guitarist/vocalist Ryan Jarman, who co-founded the band with his brothers Gary (bass) and Ross (drums). "There was a lot more texture that we wanted to bring out rather than just full-on punk-rock songs. This record has a lot more subtleties; having a second guitar player has complemented what we were doing and has definitely helped us fully realize certain songs we've wanted to do."

The Cribs recorded "Ignore the Ignorant" live at Seedy Underbelly studios in Los Angeles with British producer Nick Launay (Yeah Yeah Yeahs, Arcade Fire). Marr says Launay "believed the band's strength was in the live recording." Jarman adds, "We just plugged in and played. That's the way we like it."

To build awareness about the Cribs' new album, a series of club shows were staged during the week of release in Hollywood, New York and Portland, Ore. The Cribs also made their third appearance on "Late Show With David Letterman" Nov. 12. Having completed some European dates with Franz Ferdinand, the band will kick off its U.K. headlining tour Dec. 2 at Birmingham Academy, with dates including a Dec. 12 show at London's 5,000-capacity Brixton Academy. Then it's back to the States in mid-January to launch a U.S. leg.

"You never know how things are going to translate in America," Jarman says the day after the group's "Letterman" appearance. "But last night just felt really good. There was a lot of energy in the room." ••••

WHERE HE'S COMING FROM

In the midst of recording his next project, a self-titled album slated for spring 2010, Wyclef Jean decided to revisit his hip-hop roots on the newly released "DJ Drama Presents Wyclef Jean Aka Toussaint: St. Jean From the Hut to the Projects to the Mansion." Issued Nov. 10 on Jean's own Carnival House Records through Megaforce/Sony Music, the EP bows at No. 36 this week on Billboard's Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums chart.

The 13-track EP finds the MC/songwriter/producer adopting the persona of Toussaint St. Jean, loosely based on the 18th-century Haitian revolutionary hero Toussaint L'Ouverture. Hosted by DJ Drama, the set of all-new material features Timbaland, Eve, Lil Kim and an electrifying collaboration with Cyndi Lauper.

"When you get to a certain point in your career, people forget where you came from," Jean says of the EP's concept. "So now, Toussaint is going to show everyone my skills and how I got started in hip-hop. Just in case you thought Clef was dead and he don't spit: Here's the reinvention."

In addition to the assertive "Warrior's Anthem," the EP's other standout tracks include "The Streets Pronounce Me Dead," which finds Jean addressing all naysayers, and the Lauper-assisted "Slumdog Millionaire," on which she sings, "We don't care what you say, from the hut to the projects to the mansion, now a millionaire/If you come from the hood, expect nothing less/I wanna see you get your money."

The point of the EP, Jean adds, is that "whatever you want to do, you can accomplish. If I came from nothing and became something, if I was chosen for greatness, then so can you."

Jean is among the list of artists chosen to perform at the Nobel Peace Prize Concert Dec. 11 with Will Smith, Toby Keith and Donna Summer. In the meantime, he's already recorded several songs for his upcoming studio album, including features with Lil Wayne ("Seventeen") and Natasha Bedingfield ("Tonight"). Also on his guest wish list: Young Jeezy and Amy Winehouse.

STRAIGHT NO CHASER

HOLIDAY MAGIC

Christmas has come early for a cappella group Straight No Chaser. Its 10 members are celebrating the burgeoning success of their second holiday album, "Christmas Cheers." Released Nov. 3 on ATCO/Atlantic, the album debuted at No. 90 on the Billboard 200 and No. 11 on Top Holiday Albums with 7,000 units, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

"There's a lot of momentum for a cappella," founding member Randy Stine says. "Singing right now is kind of cool. You don't have to be the frontman or a guitar player in a band to be cool."

Just two years ago, the members of Straight No Chaser were in seven different cities, working 9-to-5 jobs after graduating from Indiana University, where the group got its start. But everything changed when Stine posted clips from one of the group's 1998 university concerts on YouTube. Straight No Chaser's version of "The 12 Days of Christmas"—which interpolates Toto's 1983 No. 1 pop hit "Africa"—received more than 7 million views. And one of those viewers was Atlantic chairman/CEO Craig Kallman.

With the group's story playing out like a holiday miracle, Straight No Chaser signed with ATCO/Atlantic. The act's 2008 debut album, "Holiday Spirits," sparked a headlining tour and album sales of 118,000 units, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

While its predecessor leaned more traditional, "Christmas Cheers" adds a comedic thread to its mix of inventively rearranged holiday standards and originals. In addition to the single "The Christmas Can-Can," the music video for another original track, "Who Spiked the Eggnog?," will premiere Nov. 30 on MSN. The album also includes a studio version of "The 12 Days of Christmas."

Currently on a 50-city, Southwest Airlines-sponsored headlining tour through Dec. 23, Straight No Chaser will appear on PBS' upcoming pledge drive special "Live in New York: Holiday Edition," which begins airing Thanksgiving weekend. Additional performances include QVC (Nov. 25) and the Christmas Day edition of NBC's "Today."

And next year, Straight No Chaser will find out if its magic extends beyond the holiday season. The group is finishing up "With a Twist," a pop album due in spring 2010. —Crystal Bell

Bon Jovi Comes Full 'Circle' With Fourth No. 1

Bon Jovi claims its fourth No. 1 album on the Billboard 200 as "The Circle" lands in the penthouse with 163,000 copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

It's the band's second topper in a row, following its 2007 release "Lost Highway." The latter bowed with 292,000—the group's best sales week since SoundScan began tabulating sales in 1991.

BON JOVI

Still, the opening for "Circle" is in line with the band's last few debuts. "Have a Nice Day" started with an "Oprah Winfrey Show"-infused 202,000 in 2005, "Bounce" bowed with 160,000 in 2002, and "Crush" crashed in with 115,000 in 2000.

An astute observer pointed out to me that the first-week sales for "Lost" appear to be an anomaly in the band's traditional sales pattern, hence why the start for "Circle" seems disproportionately smaller.

The opening week for "Lost" in 2007 was likely aided by the band's then newfound success in the country market. In 2006, the group had reached No. 1 on the Hot Country Songs chart with "Who Says You Can't Go Home" (with Sugarland's Jennifer Nettles), a track from its "Have a Nice Day" album.

That hit helped build a bridge to country radio and fans, for the first single from "Lost Highway," "(You Want To) Make a Memory," reached No. 35 on the Hot Country Songs chart. Additionally, "Lost" could have been interpreted as the band's "country" album, as it was recorded in Nashville with veteran country producer Dann Huff and featured guests LeAnn Rimes and Big & Rich.

All of that friendliness toward country likely helped "Lost," especially in its first week.

The new "Circle" isn't coming across as a country set, nor was its first single, "We Weren't Born to Follow," promoted to country radio. The song is, however, bulleted for a second week at No. 11 on the Adult Top 40 chart while it rises to No. 17 on Adult Contemporary.

Additionally, the first-week sales for "Circle" could have been hampered because it was physically available only in the CD/DVD configuration. A CD-only version of the album will be released Nov. 23. It's sort of a reverse deluxe-edition scenario, which kicked into gear more than a year ago, when Sugarland released the higher-priced deluxe version of "Love on the Inside" one week before the standard edition hit stores.

The "Circle" CD/DVD carries a list price of $19.99, though retailers were selling it for between $11.99 and $14.99 last week. Generally, most high-profile CD-only sets are offered for around $9.99 in their first week, so perhaps some consumers frowned at the higher price for the "Circle" package.

All told, the veteran group has racked up 10 top 10 albums, and all of its studio releases since 1986 have reached the top 10. Including Bon Jovi, only 17 rock bands have claimed top 10 sets on the Billboard 200 in the '80s, '90s and '00s.

50 AND COUNTING: The world has waited months for 50 Cent's often-delayed new album to arrive, and now we must wait one more week before the set graces the Billboard 200.

The digital version of the rapper's "Before I Self Destruct" was rush-released in the United States through Apple's iTunes store on Monday, Nov. 9, ahead of its CD counterpart's bow on Monday, Nov. 16.

All configurations of the set were originally scheduled to drop on Monday, Nov. 23, but the set leaked to the Internet nearly a month before that, prompting Interscope Records and Universal Music Group Distribution to push its release forward.

Because of this situation, Interscope has requested that Billboard and Nielsen SoundScan uphold an existing policy regarding album Internet leaks.

In a rule instituted nearly a year ago based on industry input, a label may ask Nielsen SoundScan to hold the digital sales of an album title for up to one week, and Billboard to delay charting that title, when a leak has resulted in a digital album beating its physical counterpart to market. Therefore, the first-week digital sales for "Before" will be added to its overall retail sum for the week ending Nov. 22 and the title will debut in next week's issue.

Billboard, along with Nielsen SoundScan, will review the merit of maintaining this rule. ••••

The band's second album (and first top 10) arrives with a career-high 56,000 and also starts at No. 1 on Top Christian Albums. Its self-titled debut spent a whopping 133 weeks on the Billboard 200, peaking at No. 57.

22

The diva's second hits compilation (27,000 copies) includes her recent Hot 100 No. 1 "3," plus another 17 singles. All told, 17 of the 18 tracks on the album were hits on the Mainstream Top 40 chart.

29

The rock band's new odds 'n sods set, paired with a live DVD, starts with 21,000. Meanwhile, at No. 57, Melanie Fiona re-enters after the set was released last week as a physical CD, following a three-week window as a digital exclusive.

35

As the singer's tour reaches South America this week, his new live CD/DVD release starts with 16,000 copies. He'll return to the United States for a pair of charity concerts Dec. 21 in New York.

39

A $199 super deluxe version of this rarities album comes packaged with a real working amplifier, two DVDs, a 164-page coffee-table book, a vinyl LP and other memorabilia.

115

Up 110%, the duo's album profits from its exposure on last week's Country Music Assn. Awards telecast (see page 49). And, it's never too late to trumpet a fun feat: The pair is only the sixth act this year to concurrently chart three albums.

139

Wal-Mart released two "Soundcheck" CD/DVD packages last week: this one from the Jonas Brothers (5,000) and one from Demi Lovato, which just misses the tally (2,000).

160

The British star's album title couldn't be any more ironic, as the set debuts at No. 2 on the U.K. Albums chart this week, edged out by a No. 1 entry from vocal quartet JLS, last year's "X Factor" runner-up.

189

The 32-song film soundtrack boasts a stellar lineup, including tracks from the Who, Cream, the Jimi Hendrix Experience, the Supremes, the Beach Boys, David Bowie and Dusty Springfield.

198

Just creeping onto the list is this six-song digital EP from the band that sold 3,000 downloads last week. Its songs were recorded May 28 at a gig in Tokyo.

The title is the first song on Capitol Records to reach the top 10 of this chart and Hot Country Songs (where it moves to No. 1) since Juice Newton's "The Sweetest Thing" in 1982.

The cast's take on the signature song from the musical "Wicked" vaults 53-15 on Hot Digital Songs (70,000; up 185%), marking the first "Glee" tune to spike in sales in its second week of availability.

58

The second single from her upcoming "She Wolf" album enters with 25,000 first-week downloads. The song also moves 30-29 on the Mainstream Top 40 chart.

88

JAY-Z RULES WITH 'EMPIRE'

JAY-Z

Jay-Z earns his fourth Hot 100 No. 1, but his first as a lead or co-billed performer, as his collaboration with Alicia Keys, "Empire State of Mind," moves 2-1. The rap legend's prior chart-toppers came as a featured vocalist on Mariah Carey's "Heartbreaker" (1999), his now-wife Beyoncé's "Crazy in Love" (2003) and Rihanna's "Umbrella" (2007). "Empire" is also Keys' fourth overall No. 1 and first since 2007's "No One." "Empire" takes Hot 100 Airplay Gainer honors as it rises 6-1 on Hot 100 Airplay (up 15 million listener impressions to 109.5 million), the largest climb to No. 1 on that chart since Kanye West's "Stronger" jumped 7-1 in the Oct. 6, 2007, issue. —Silvio Pietroluongo

Jason DeRulo ascends 2-1 on Mainstream Top 40 with "Whatcha Say." The song's coronation marks just the seventh week at No. 1 on the chart for a solo male this year, the lowest sum since 2000, when no solo male artists occupied the penthouse. Male soloists also failed to reach the summit in 1992, 1993, 1996 and 1997.

On Triple A (viewable at billboard.biz/charts), Sheryl Crow's 1994 debut album, "Tuesday Night Music Club," yields a new chart entry, as "Killer Life" bows at No. 30.

The album was rereleased Nov. 17 along with a second disc of B-sides, rarities and outtakes and a DVD featuring the album's videos. The package also contains a newly produced documentary.

"Killer Life" is Crow's 19th Triple A-charted title, the most among female artists; Tracy Chapman and Sarah McLachlan rank second with nine entries apiece.

Two songs by format newcomers reach the top 10 on Alternative (viewable at billboard.biz/charts). "1901" by Phoenix charges 13-9 in its 19th chart week with its first Greatest Gainer award, while Cage the Elephant notches its second top 10 with "Back Against the Wall" (11-10).

The lead single from the trio's upcoming second album draws 37.6 million impressions, marking the group's second No. 1 (see Hot Box, page 41) following "Run to You," which topped the July 25 chart. The new album arrives at retail Jan. 26.

With his third chart entry, and more than seven years after his chart debut, the Missouri native claims his first top 10 song. He debuted on the list with "Memphis" in 2002 (peaking at No. 52) and reached No. 47 with "I'm About to Come Alive" in 2008.

CMAs SPUR SPIKES

Overall country album sales are up 3% following the 43rd annual Country Music Assn. Awards (ABC-TV, Nov. 11), even considering the market-inflating arrival of Carrie Underwood's "Play On" last issue (318,000). CMAs-related gains account for 21 of the 31 bullets on Top Country Albums, led by Greatest Gainer Lady Antebellum's "I Run to You" (up 26,000 copies) and Jamey Johnson's "That Lonesome Song." Johnson's set takes the percentage-based Pacesetter trophy with a 286% spike. Similar gains dot Hot Digital Songs, where 15 of this issue's 40 bulleted titles are driven by the telecast. —Wade Jessen

"Meet Me Halfway" by the Black Eyed Peas rallies 11-9 on the Rhythmic chart, giving their album "The E.N.D." its third top 10 and the quartet's fifth overall. The act's last two albums, "Elephunk" and "Monkey Business," managed just one top 10 each.

BEYONCÉ'S 'SWEET' SEVENTH NO. 1

Beyoncé's seventh No. 1 on the Rhythmic chart, "Sweet Dreams," ties 50 Cent, Nelly, T-Pain and Usher for the most Rhythmic No. 1s this decade and Mariah Carey for the most by a woman in the chart's 17-year history. "Sweet" is her first chart-topper since "Irreplaceable" in 2006 and the first from "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce," which charted five previous tracks. (The multiformat smash "Single Ladies [Put a Ring on It]" peaked at No. 2.)

On Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, two newcomers launch their careers with top five debuts. Washington, D.C., native Wale earns the Hot Shot Debut at No. 3 with "Attention Deficit" while Canadian Melanie Fiona's first effort, "The Bridge," is No. 4. Chart vets Wyclef Jean, Joe and 50 Cent also bow at Nos. 36, 47 and 48, respectively, with early sales.

Usher claims his second top 10 on Adult R&B as the track lifts 11-8. The singer spent seven weeks at No. 1 earlier this year with his last single, "Here I Stand."

This is the singer's first set of back-to-back visits to the top five. Previous entry "Pretty Wings" (No. 5) spent 14 weeks at No. 1.

The duo earns the highest rank for a song that has spent 52 weeks on a chart in the Nielsen SoundScan era (since 1991). The former record holder R. Kelly's "Step in the Name of Love," was No. 11 after a year on this list.

20

Buoyed by a gain of 4.4 million listener impressions in her second chart week, Rihanna makes her fastest climb to the top 20. Meanwhile, at No. 28, Jaheim scores his speediest ascent to the top 30 as a lead artist.

Up 11 [illegible] listener impressions the sub crew co- starring Drake bolts 21 positions. It's the third-most-played track at WPWX (Chicago (54 spins).

BLIGE BEGINS 'STRONGER' JOURNEY

Mary J. Blige primes her ninth studio album with the debut of "I Am" at No. 46 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs. As the lead single from "Stronger," due Dec. 22, the song earns more than 5 million in audience and grants Blige her best start since 2007. While it's a lofty beginning for Blige, she's no stranger to high debuts. Since her first single in 1992, "I Am" ranks as her 17th top 50 bow as a lead artist, the most by a female. Overall this is her 59th appearance, second only to Aretha Franklin (99) among females.

In only its second chart week, Eddy-K's "Mami Besame" catapults 35-7 on Tropical Airplay (1.1 million listener impressions, up 327%). The last new artist who was credited as a lead vocalist to reach the top 10 this quickly was Marlon, with "Usted Abuso" in 2006 (15-7 in its second week on the list).

Victor Manuelle returns to the charts with the No. 1 debut of "Yo Mismo" on Tropical Albums, selling nearly 6,000 copies. The title is Manuelle's seventh No. 1 debut on the list, the most in the chart's 24-year history. "Yo Mismo" also debuts at No. 3 on Top Latin Albums, his fifth top five debut on that tally.

SANZ: 'PARADISE' FOUND

Despite competition from Latin pop newcomer Jencarlos, Alejandro Sanz debuts at No. 1 on Top Latin Albums and Top Latin Pop Albums with "Paraiso Express," selling 9,000 copies. It's his fifth top five debut on Latin Albums and his highest bow since "No Es Lo Mismo" started at No. 2 in the Sept. 20, 2003, issue. Lead single "Looking for Paradise" continues to dominate the airplay charts, residing in the top five of every tally except Regional Mexican Airplay. —Rauly Ramirez dies frontman Black Francis may have his hands full balanc- g family life (he and his wife, Violet Clark, have five kids), ongoing Pixies tour and a solo career, but it didn't take much nvincing for him to participate in a two-night musical/com- y benefit in Los Angeles for 9-month-old Winston Bertrand, o was born with lymphatic and venous malformations.

GOOD WORKS

RTISTS HELP BABY WINSTON

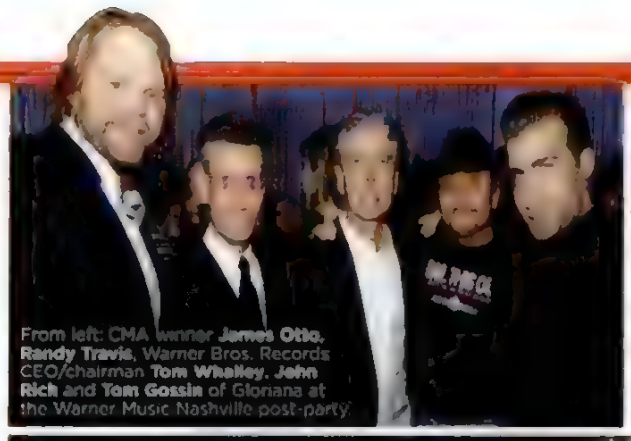
"I saw one picture of Winston and I said, 'Alright, I'm in,' " ncis says. "He's too cute, I can't stand it."

The first Winston Calling benefit show will be held Dec. 8 at the Echoplex and feature Francis performing solo and with members of the Pixies, plus appearances by "Weird Al" Yankovic (who plans to sing the Pixies song "I Bleed"), Michael Penn, Flea, ·88, Grand Duchy and members of Love & Rockets and She nts Revenge. The following night at the Echo will feature nedy sets by Tim & Eric, Bob Odenkirk, Pixies drummer vid Lovering and another performance by Francis, who will st each night.



"I'm hoping to raise $30,000 through this benefit," says rk, who helped organize the events and plays in the band nd Duchy with Francis. "It would be nice to see it become early benefit, at least for a few years until [Winston is] out he dark times."

Money raised will go to Winston's family. Clark has also rted Winston's Village (winstonsvillage.bbnow.org), a Web to help raise funds for his medical bills.

Clark became "e-mail buddies" with Winston's mother, Jen- er Bertrand, after reaching out on MySpace to congratulate for winning season three of HDTV's "Design Star." "Since whole family was kind of addicted to HDTV at the time, had all been rooting for her," Clark says.

Several e-mails later, Clark learned about Winston's condi- n and decided to help. "As a mother of five, it hit a really p chord with me and I was moved," she says. "I was heart- ken for her family."

INSIDE TRACK

NEIL SERVES UP 'TEQUILA'

Motley Crüe may be taking 2010 off, but fans will still see plenty of frontman Vince Neil.

The singer is working on "Tattoos and Tequila," his first solo studio album since 1995's "Carved in Stone." He plans to hit the studio the first week of December, with Night Ranger's Jack Blades producing, and have the title track first single out in January, followed by the album in March and a tour in the spring and summer.

"It sounds like rock'n'roll. It sounds like me, basically," Neil says of the new material, which comes on the heels of the Crüe's new "Greatest Hits (Updated)" album. "I'm not going to go out and do any experimentation with stuff. I've done that before. I've found what I do best is sing straight-ahead rock'n'roll, and that's what I set out to do here."

Neil says Blades "has been a buddy of mine forever." The two worked together on the 1992 single "You're Invited (But Your Friend Can't Come)," and both have homes in northern California near San Francisco. "Jack has a studio up there, so it's convenient to work on music and just hang out."

Neil—who owns tattoo parlors, a tequila brand and a growing restaurant chain—anticipates working on new Crüe music in 2010. The group is also gearing up for its 30th anniversary in 2011.

Pain In My Heart

Piracy Is Exacting A Heavy Toll On Independent Artists Around The World

BY GERALD SELIGMAN

"The music industry." These days the term is almost spat out, muttered with dismissal, disdain. "Good riddance," they say. "Piracy is just desserts to a corporate industry ripping off artists and fans. The industry's demise is a good thing. Death to the gatekeepers! Long live democracy!"

Watching the major labels flounder and litigate, it is indeed hard to be sympathetic. Slapping 14-year-olds with six-digit fines wasn't designed to win the public relations battle; it was designed to intimidate. Yet all it did was lend one more rationalization to those who justify theft with the whiff of good deeds. We're Robin Hoods all, stealing from the rich and giving to the . . . well, to ourselves. And why not? The artists don't ever see any of the money, anyway.

At a recent arts conference in Maputo, Mozambique, a young European pup from the Observatoire Culturel ACP (Africa Caribbean Pacific) in Brussels, did the yeah-sayers one better. "Piracy is a form of cultural diversity," he declared, erring on the side of cool. Then spoke Abdoul Aziz Dieng, chairman of the Senegalese musician's union, his voice cracking as he told of the loss of income to already impoverished artists. "We need help," he pleaded. Not clever turns of phrase.

But wait. Artists pained by piracy, hurt by the accelerating collapse of the music industry? Yes, indeed, along with all the honest players who have dedicated their lives and livelihoods to music and the artists who make it.

For the music industry isn't just the ever-shrinking group of major multinationals with stone-age business plans and lawyers' writs where their strategies should be. It's any artist who wants to earn a living from his or her work—just as all of us do in our own professions. It's any small-label owner who takes huge risks to bring the music to the world.

Look at the past 75 years. So often it was the independent labels and operators who supported, then sustained the best of what has come down to us. It was the indie sector where the commitment was, the willingness to fund unlikely choices, that first risky step in a possible career for tens of thousands of artists. Sure, there were major-label saints like John Hammond who signed everyone from Count Basie and Billie Holiday to Bob Dylan and Bruce Springsteen. But they were the exceptions, not the rule. For every Ahmet Ertegun, there were a dozen Moses Asches, Chris Strachwitzes, Chris Blackwells, Russell Simmonses. For it was the independent label network that broke strangleholds and nurtured new artists long before the bean counters could count them out.

It is time to express solidarity with all those who have brought us new artists and new music and who have helped sustain the careers of the ones who have broken through.

After more than 25 years in the music business, I'm still striving to support music I want to go home and listen to—wherever it may be, wherever it comes from. In the process, I've met thousands of people dedicated to working honestly and well, some of the best people I know who have dedicated their lives to—here it comes—culture.

Sure, some indies have earned reproach, haven't paid royalties, have robbed artists in the age-old style. But many others have bestowed us with music we never would have known and can no longer quite live without.

These labels—and the artists they support—are the ones being hurt by piracy. Royalties are disappearing faster than sympathy for the RIAA. There's just no way to rationalize that for every song downloaded illegally, swapped or simply given away without authorization, artists and honest operators lose out. Yes, some in affluent societies write it off to marketing and publicity. But others—many, most—cannot. And as that window shuts on labels hoping to recoup risky investments to break new artists, they can hardly afford to open it up for a new musical treasure to climb through. Where does that leave us? Like any host that's had its blood sucked dry by a parasite. No more Grateful Dead, just stone cold dead.

It is time to distinguish between those who exploit artists and those who support them. And it is time to express solidarity with all those who have brought us new artists and new music and who have helped sustain the careers of the ones who have broken through. Yes, time to stop turning away from those like Abdoul Aziz Dieng as he tells of artists who can no longer afford to make music.

The accelerating demise of the music industry is no cause for celebration. That would be to dance on the graves of all those who have dedicated their lives to making the kind of records they—and we—wanted to go home to listen to. ▪▪▪

MySpace Music Maneuvers To Reinforce Position In On-Demand Streaming

As 2009 winds to a close, MySpace Music is celebrating its first year of existence by attempting to strengthen its position in the U.S. digital music market.

The company is in the process of acquiring rival on-demand music streaming service imeem, according to sources familiar with the deal (Billboard.biz, Nov. 17). If completed, it would mark the second major acquisition for MySpace Music, following its purchase in August of music social network iLike.

What's more, MySpace Music, a joint venture between News Corp. and the major labels, has settled its long-running standoff with independent music group Merlin in a deal that restructures its partnerships with independent labels (Billboard.biz, Nov. 20).

Both developments come at a crucial time for MySpace Music, which is facing questions over whether it can continue offering free on-demand streaming music supplemented by advertising or whether a paid monthly subscription tier is inevitable. Additionally, it will face a new competitor sometime next year when European sensation Spotify is expected to go live in the United States.

On the acquisition front, MySpace is benefiting from the inevitable contraction of the digital music market. By acquiring imeem, MySpace would emerge as the only significant on-demand, ad-supported music streaming service in the States. As such, MySpace could potentially serve as the sole outlet for advertisers interested in running online music campaigns, which could allow the company to charge higher rates than if it had to compete with other services for the same dollar.

Beyond that, MySpace will gain much-needed innovation by acquiring imeem's technology and services, as well as the minds behind their creation. MySpace's acquisition of imeem will bring another social recommendation service under its roof with built-in links to concert ticket sales as well as a team of iPhone app developers, among other things. Like iLike, imeem is one of the digital music services that recently partnered with Google as part of its enhanced music search service.

Imeem boasts a battle-scarred advertising sales team that increased the number of custom ad campaigns it ran from 30 in 2007 to more than 175 so far this year. It also acquires imeem's Snocap technology, which in addition to its content ID and filtering capability adds a download music service that MySpace could use to sell music directly rather than linking to iTunes or Amazon as it does now.

While all this looks great on paper, neither iLike nor imeem has been able to convert its user base into a solid revenue stream. And a partnership that MySpace entered with Snocap in 2006 to enable artists to sell music from their MySpace pages never gained traction. MySpace is gambling that the integration of these companies into its music service—backed by the deep pockets of News Corp.—will allow them to thrive.

"The consolidation of all the players inside a single house that has the backing of a large organization that can make big bets will make things easier," a former executive of a rival ad-supported music service says.

As for its deal with Merlin, MySpace didn't disclose the specific terms of the deal. But the two sides said in a statement that indie labels will have "an opportunity to participate in and benefit from the financial growth of MySpace Music," even though they aren't part of the joint venture between MySpace proper and the four major labels. Under their restructured partnership with MySpace, Merlin and indie label representatives will also be allowed to attend some MySpace Music board meetings. Merlin-affiliated labels include Domino, Epitaph and Beggars Group, which release music by such acts as Animal Collective, Tom Waits and Vampire Weekend.

"I wanted to make sure MySpace didn't lose track of what its core was," MySpace Music president Courtney Holt says. "This is an opening up of an opportunity to everybody that I wish had been there at the beginning, and I'm glad it's there now."

The deals wrap up a busy year for MySpace, during which the company added Holt as president, expanded into Australia and New Zealand and launched a music video hub, a data analytics tool for participating artists, a streaming music search deal with Google and other initiatives.

Still unclear is whether these efforts will lift MySpace Music to the levels of profitability the labels are seeking from the joint venture or merely serve to add ballast to an already struggling model. ....

Building A Mystery

Caiman Holdings, '07 Acquirer Of Tower.com, Says It No Longer Owns The Site. So Who Does?

Who's the boss? Tower.com

Caiman Holdings' Oct. 29 filing of Chapter 727 liquidation papers in the 11th Judicial Circuit Court for Miami-Dade County in Florida leaves behind the question of who owns Tower.com.

Tower.com is still up and running and sources say being supplied with product and fulfilled to consumers by Alliance Entertainment.

Caiman Holdings CEO Didier Pilon, who in 2007 represented himself as the owner of Tower.com, now says that ownership changed hands a while ago, but he won't disclose who the new owners are. Pilon did say, however, that he has left Tower.com and claims that the new owners were conducting a search for a new CEO. Sources say Tower.com is currently being run by Sanny Wong, who previously has been identified to Billboard by sources as a Caiman employee. Wong didn't return a call for comment.

In April 2007, Caiman acquired Tower.com in an auction, paying $4.2 million for the Web site, the Tower logo and other intellectual property at the company. It was one of the last assets to be sold as part of the liquidation of Tower Records, the long-beloved music chain.

Retail Track

ED CHRISTMAN

At the time, Caiman was an online retailer that sold music from its own Web site and through the Amazon Marketplace. But with its acquisition of Tower.com, Caiman stopped operating under its own name and concentrated on the Tower brand, switching to acting as a wholesaler and fulfillment operation for the Tower site.

Prior to being an online retailer, Caiman operated as a music distributor but filed for Chapter 11 protection in 2002. After that filing, it stopped being a distributor and started operating as an online merchant, mainly operating through the Amazon Marketplace. In the early days of Caiman's ownership of Tower.com, Pilon was sometimes accompanied by a man named Roald Smeets, who was described by the New York Times in a Sept. 15, 1997, article "as a Dutch businessman who started his record company Caiman." It isn't clear whether the label was connected to Caiman Holdings.

Pilon says Smeets is no longer affiliated with Tower.com. Smeets couldn't be located for comment.

In the latest Chapter 727 filing—the Florida state equivalent of a federal Chapter 7 liquidation filing—Caiman seeks to assign $578,000 in assets to Phillip J. Von Kahle, a managing director of Michael Moecker & Associates, a firm that specializes in liquidating companies among other services.

While the filing lists assets of $578,000, Billboard estimates that creditors' claims total somewhere between $6 million and $10 million, depending on whether the amount it owes each creditor is counted in full or as settlements. At least three creditors say that Caiman never made good on the terms of their settlement.

For example, should Baker & Taylor's claim be counted as the $8 million it said it was owed on $64 million in purchases made by Caiman since 2005, in a court filing it made to the U.S. District Court in Southern Florida? Or should it be counted as the $4.1 million it agreed to in a court settlement overseen by the same District Court? The final settlement was ultimately sealed but sources say it was similar to the settlement spelled out in the filing, which was structured with a $1 million initial payment due within 90 days of the signed agreement and 26 subsequent monthly payments of $120,0 Sources say Caiman never made initial payment.

The creditors privately tell Billbo that they suspect they will never one cent of the $578,000 because Chapter 727 filings say that there "scheduled liens well in access of liquidation value." But some of creditors nevertheless are consider trying to convert the Chapter 727 fil into a Chapter 11 bankruptcy filing

While a Chapter 11 proceeding more expensive, which means credit would probably get less than they wo in a 727 proceeding, they say a U Chapter 11 trustee can perform for sic accounting. They say that proc might also reveal what one creditor c the "$64,000 question": Who owns a is running Tower.com?

The holiday selling season is kicking off with a bang, thanks to Susan Boyle's "I Dreamed a Dream," which label sales and distribution executives say is in contention to displace Eminem's "Relapse" as the album with the best sales week of the year.

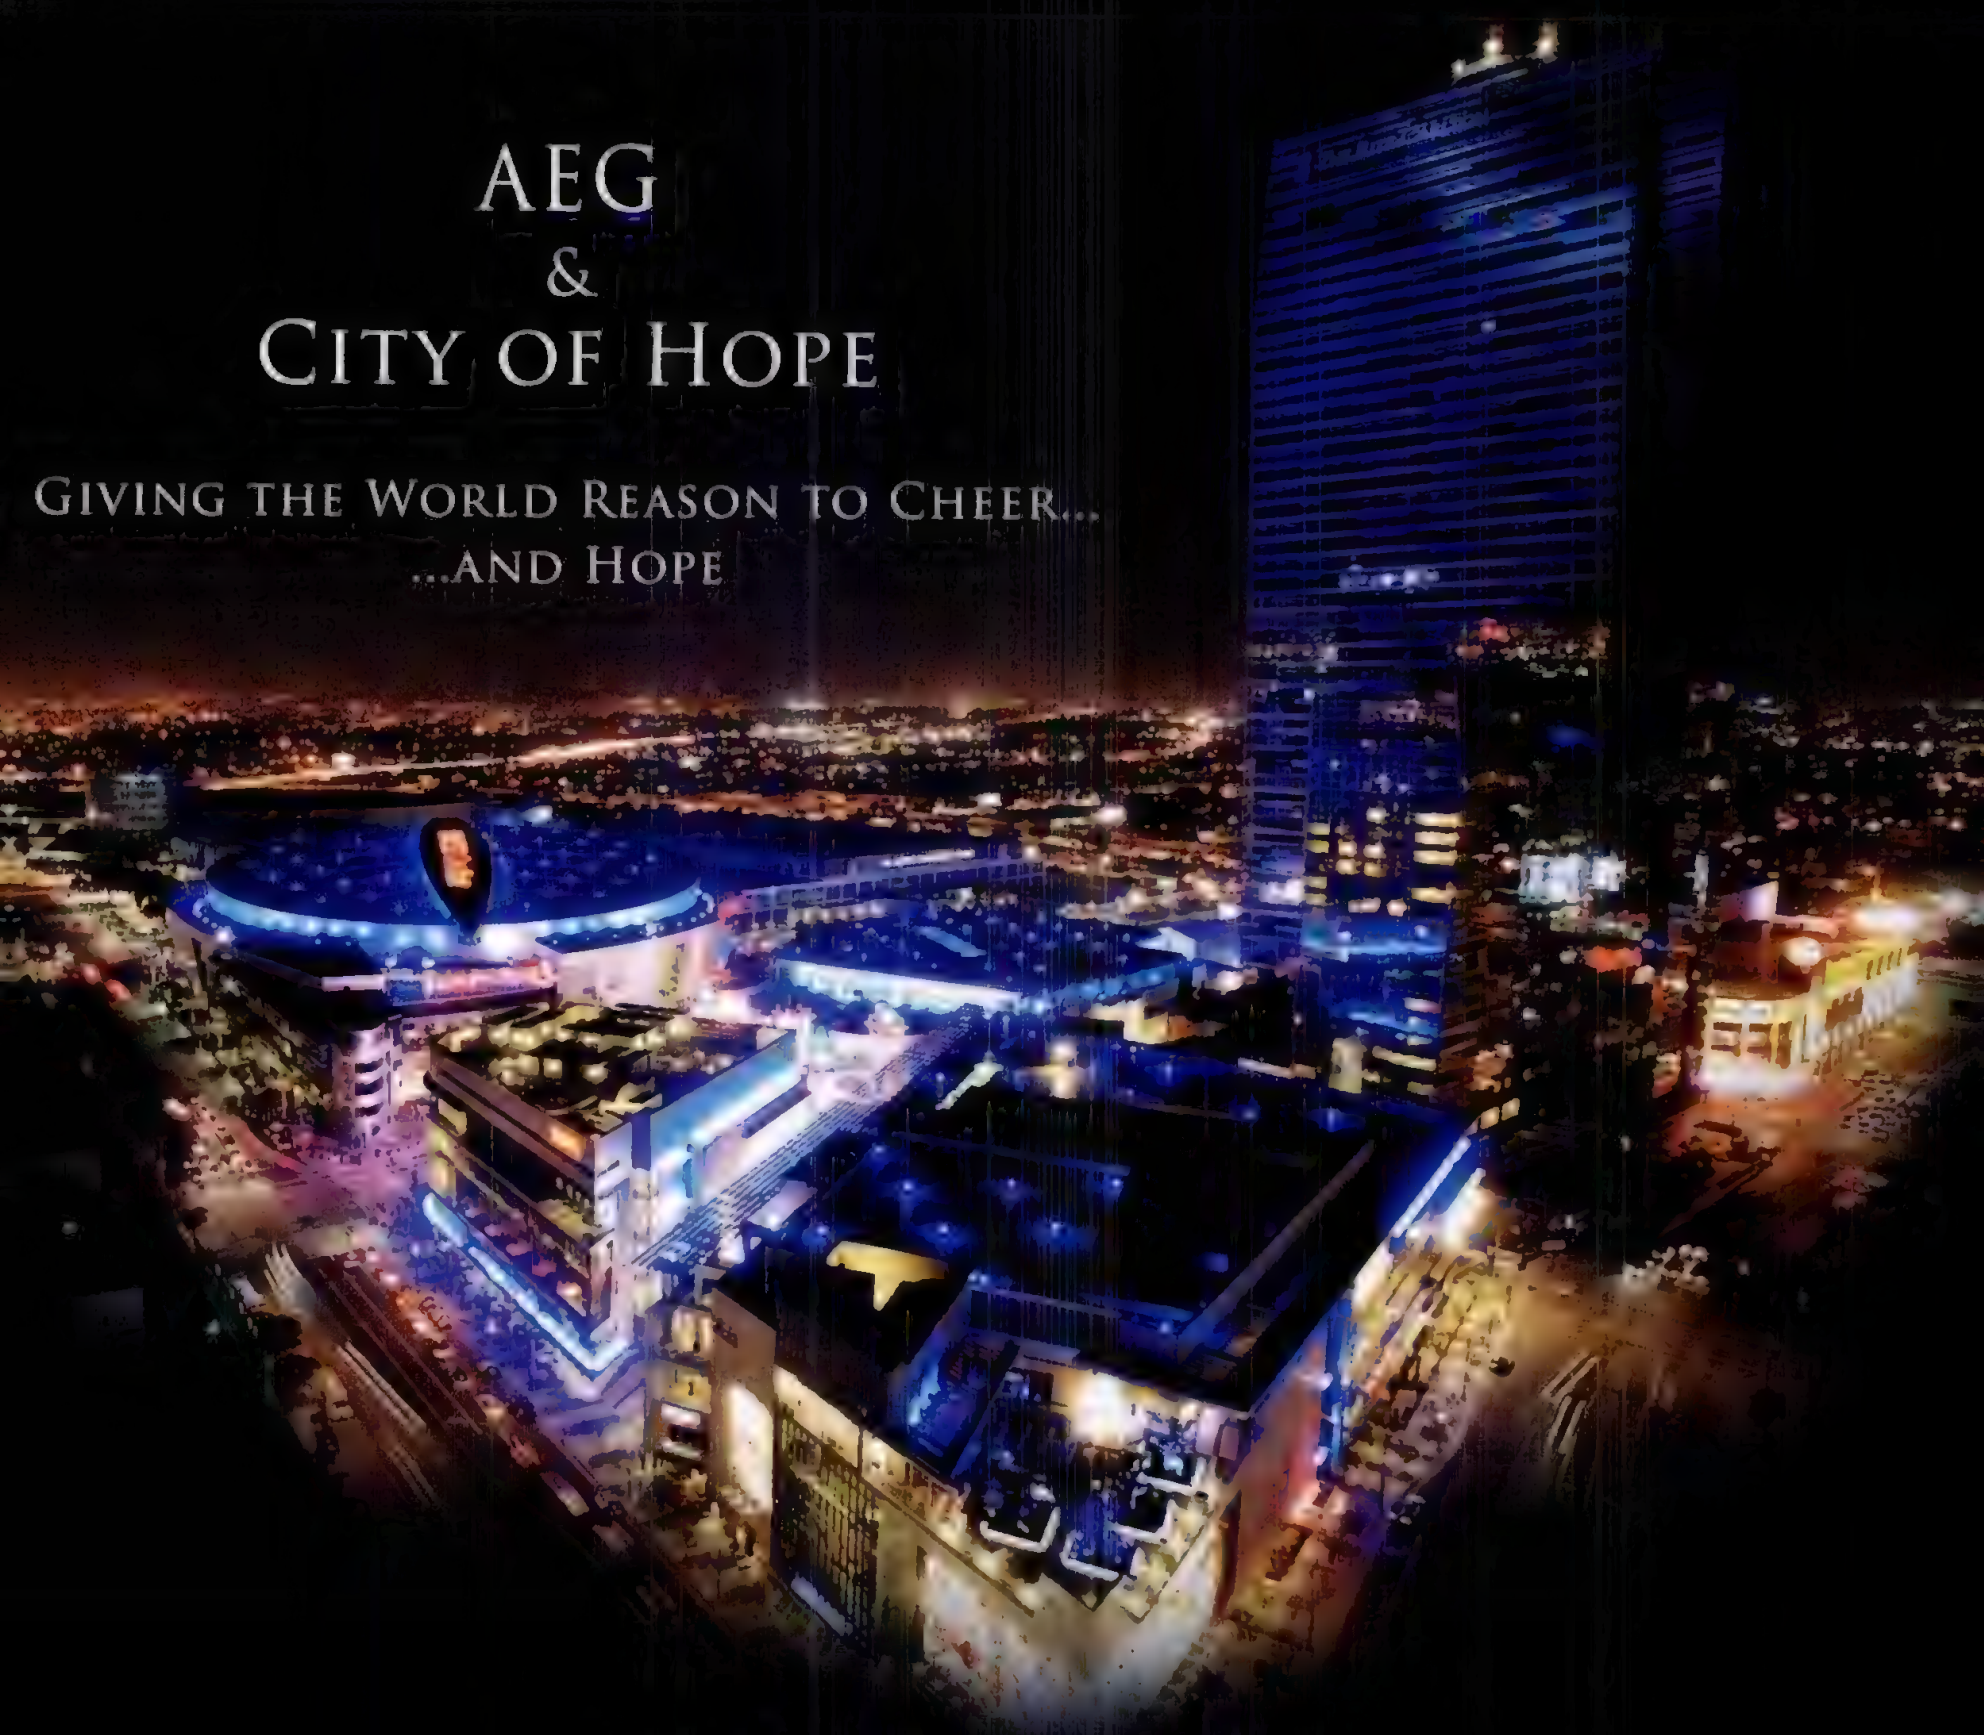
First-week U.S. sales projections for the former "Britain's Got Talent" contestant's debut album, which was released Nov. 23 on Syco Music/Columbia, mostly range from 550,000 to 600,000-plus units. That places it within shouting distance of "Relapse," which sold 608,000 copies in its debut week that ended May 24, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

Whether it takes top honors for best sales week of the year could depend on how quickly Sony Music Entertainment can replenish supplies during the Thanksgiving holiday week.

If Sony can keep product rolling and "if big boxes have stock on Black Friday, who knows how well the album can do," says one particularly bullish executive, who believes sales of "I Dreamed a Dream" have the potential to reach as high as 700,000 units.

Cable shopping channel QVC reports that it h pre-orders of more than 81,000 units for the Bo album, its best sales performance in 10 years, wh Amazon says the album has generated its largest glo pre-order in its history. Amazon doesn't disclose nu bers, but sources say its U.S. pre-orders alone reach 80,000 units.

According to Hastings Entertainment senior of merchandising Alan Van Ongevalle, the albun outperforming the chain's expectations. Mainstre pop is a genre that the chain has never perform well in, "so it's doing extremely well for us," he sa "Last week, John Mayer was our No. 1 record and t is in a genre we do reasonably well in, and so fa one day she has done more than he sold all week. are not out of stock yet on her, but we are head that way quickly."



Van Ongevalle says Hastings placed a reorder fore street date and he expects to be in stock for holiday weekend.

Some sales and distribution executives see Boy surprisingly robust debut-week sales as a hopeful e indicator of a (relatively) happy holiday season music retailers. Boyle's album is part of a strong lease schedule that retailers hope will drive sales d ing the final month of the year (see story, page 20

Also adding to the festive holiday cheer w Adam Lambert's "For Your Entertainment" and L Gaga's deluxe and EP versions of "The Fame M ster," which sales and distribution executives were selling exceptionally well during their first days of availability.

Pretty Persuasion

AAIM Members Enlist Support Of Indie Acts For Anti-Piracy PSA Drive

Law-abiding c... HIS ORCHESTRA

Since the explosion of music piracy in the late '90s, no one in the recording industry has been able to figure out how to persuade young consumers that stealing music is wrong. Through the years, acts ranging from Metallica to Lily Allen have gone public with the completely defensible argument that they should be paid for their creative work, only to be subject to derision and backlash. Even staunchly pro-copyright industry friends of mine roll their eyes at some of the RIAA's PSAs, which can come across as clunky and preachy.

Now members of the American Assn. of Independent Music are seeking to change that with a grass-roots effort to convey a simple message: "Stealing music sucks." As part of the effort, AAIM members have created a Facebook group asking music acts to record DIY PSAs urging fans to pay for their music and explaining how illegal downloading hurts artists.

While the initiative is still in its early stages, Long Live Crime Records head Susan Ferris has already recruited a director and producer to help her create the first two PSAs, which are posted on Facebook, YouTube and MySpace. One ad features the band his Orchestra, with members of an audience interrupting the group's set and taking away its instruments one by one, until the music is silenced. The other ad features a young man washing a car while talking about how much hard work went into scraping together the money to buy it—only to have someone drive off with it at the end.

Both clips conclude with the following onscreen message: "Support musicians and their music by paying for the tunes you want."

Brett Roelen, singer/lead guitarist of the Uprising, allowed Ferris to use one of his songs in the car ad. "As an artist, I wanted to bring attention to the piracy issue," he says.

Roelen adds that his songs have been used without his permission on a number of occasions. "I was in a video store and all of a sudden I heard my song in a snowboarding movie," he says. "We never gave anyone permission to do that. And I've gotten calls from friends, saying they heard our tracks on TV shows that never reached out to us for a license."

And while almost all the outlets that have taken his work without permission have stopped using the songs when he calls them, Roelen says he's never been retroactively compensated for use.

"It's one thing to give away a song voluntarily," he says. "But it's another thing to have a song used in an ad or on a TV show that someone else is making money on."

Ferris adds that while individual decisions to give away music should be respected, a clear distinction should be drawn between that and music being downloaded illegally.

"While the message is the same whether an artist is a superstar or a baby band, it just seems more poignant with indie bands," she says. "Indie bands often don't have tons of other revenue streams and for some, this is how they pay the rent."

While the artists in the ads might be indie, Ferris says she wants as much mainstream exposure for the campaign as possible. "I want these on Fuse, MTV, VH1—everywhere," she says. "AAIM has really backed the initiative, and I'd love to get some huge PR company to help us out. We sent the PSAs over to the U.K. and we're working on developing partnerships with schools. I want these to be massive."

Another future initiative associated with the campaign might highlight who else suffers when music is stolen. After all, it's not just artists who lose out. Those who work behind the scenes have also suffered a decline in work and income, according to Douglas Smith, lead vocalist for his Orchestra and one of the stars of the HBO drama "Big Love."

"If music should be free, then studio time and engineers should be free and we should all live in a Marxist paradise with rotating jobs and zero possessions," Smith says. "If you like the tune, for the love of potatoes, drop the 99 cents." ••••

with STEVE BURSKY

by CORTNEY HARDING

When Dispatch, a band with only one album with sales in the six-figure range, so out three nights at New York's Madison Square Garden, most people in the mus industry were shocked.

But the band's manager, Steve Bursky, wasn't surprised in the least. "For a ba that had a radio hit to reunite after three years and headline MSG would be almo impossible," he says. "But for a band that grew through word-of-mouth and who fans had a sense of ownership, it wasn't surprising."

Bursky is working the same type of slow-burn, grass-roots magic with Owl Cit the gentle electro-pop act that seems to have come out of nowhere to perch at the Billboard Hot 100 for two weeks with the track "Fireflies." (It's No. 3 this week But looks can be deceiving. Here, Bursky explains just how much work goes into cr ating an overnight sensation.

1 How does the success you had with Dispatch inform what you're doing with Owl City?

I started working with Dispatch my freshman year of college, doing it from my dorm room. Pretty early on, it was clear that these guys were going to redefine the norms of the music business. They had no desire to be on a major label or to adapt their sound to radio or be part of a scene that was cool. They had a vision for building a community and a fan base. I'd also be remiss if I didn't mention Napster. Back in 2000 and 2001 when it was a free service, bands like Dispatch really began to thrive, based on word-of-mouth.

2 How did you first connect with Owl City?

To me, Owl City is a story of hope in the music business. Adam [Young, the band's frontman] was an only child from the middle of nowhere in Minnesota; he was loading trucks for Coca-Cola and decided he hated his life and started recording tracks in his basement and putting them up on MySpace and then did a deal with CD Baby to get them on iTunes. The week we started working with him in November of last year, he sold 2,919 tracks off his independent EP and LP combined and 220 albums. The same week 12 months later, he sold 262,000 tracks and 34,000 albums.

3 Why did you take a slow-burn approach with Owl City?

He had the viral word-of-mouth coming in, so that helped. My idea was to make sure every gatekeeper in the music business—every journalist, every music supervisor, every radio programmer—discovered Owl City the same way his fan base discovered him, as opposed to him being just another major-label priority shoved down people's throats. I started feeding people facts, showing them how much it was growing and making it so undeniable they couldn't help but get onboard.

4 What role did MySpace and oth sites play in the launch?

The "MySpace phenomenon" bands a really a dime a dozen, and who cares you have 10,000 friends or 100,000 pla if that doesn't translate to you selli records? But in the case of Owl City, it c translate. Weeks where the number plays on his MySpace page went up, sales would go up and vice versa. Two, MySpace fans weren't passive, they we active. He was getting comments fr kids every minute.

5 What was the t ping point when Owl C went from undergrou artist to bona fide p star? Was there moment when you kn he was going to cr over?

It's been a long series of m ments. The best part about i that Adam is so grateful to be able to this and is so unfazed by it. Every ti I tell him about some new mileston he says, "Is that good?" The touring unbelievable. We're in China right n and playing to sold-out crowds ev night. The film and TV promotion great, and the press is starting to co around on him. It's so funny, too, cause "Fireflies" was never supposed be the first single—it became the s gle because we got a call at the top June from iTunes saying they wanted make it the single of the week, and went from there.

6 How are you positioning him a career artist?

I don't think he's going to be a one- wonder, because his album is rea deep. We also have a lot going on sides radio. We are working the road a other avenues to make sure he's posed. And I'm going to put him in studio in May and make a record for n summer so we can go seamlessly i the new album.

DIGITAL BY ANTONY BRUNO

Shifting Out Of Neutral

Opposition To Net Neutrality Is Bound To Build In The Recording Industry

While the recording industry has rarely been shy about voicing opinions about digital-related matters, its stance on the now-escalating debate over Internet neutrality has by and large remained strangely, well, neutral.

However, it's only a matter of time before the industry hops off the fence and lands firmly on the side opposing Net neutrality. With content creators worried about piracy and Internet service providers keeping an eye out for new business models, their common interests are likely to lead to some collaboration on the issue.

Hands off the Web: WILCO is among the bands to come out in favor of Net neutrality through the Future of Music Coalition's 'Rock the Net' campaign.

On its simplest level, Internet neutrality rules would prohibit ISPs from placing any kind of restrictions on the content and services transmitted over their networks. ISPs oppose any such legislation or regulation because they want the freedom to manage their networks as they see fit. With all the multimedia content that's transmitted over the Internet, ISPs are feeling the strain and want to start directing the flow of content much like a traffic cop manages a busy intersection.

Meanwhile, those supporting Internet neutrality fear ISPs would do so by charging for access to the speedier lanes, meaning smaller companies could have a harder time competing on the Internet against larger, richer firms. What's more, neutrality advocates say protections are needed to ensure that ISPs offering content services—either of their own creation or through partnerships—don't purposely degrade the distribution capabilities of rival offerings.

The ongoing debate gained newfound life after the FCC voted in October to begin a formal rule-making process on rules proposed by FCC chairman Julius Genachowski that would prohibit ISPs from preventing users from accessing lawful content and applications and would define what "reasonable network management" practices ISPs would be allowed to pursue to minimize the impact of network congestion.

Members of the public can submit comments on the issue until Jan. 14, and all music industry lobbying groups will likely weigh in. But don't expect to see more than a few such parties take a strong position one way or another.

On the one hand, labels, publishers and artists support an open Internet that will let independent and major-label artists have equal access to distribution and audience. The Future of Music Coalition in particular has been a vocal advocate for neutrality with the support of such acts as Wilco, Pearl Jam and R.E.M. through its "Rock the Net" campaign.

On the other hand, there is a widespread concern in the music industry that Internet neutrality would prohibit ISPs from implementing software that could block or filter the transmission of unlicensed content. The RIAA summed up this viewpoint in an October blog post: "No governmental policy should interfere with the ability of an ISP to address the illegal transmission of copyrighted works or other illicit content."

The Motion Picture Assn. of America made much the same statement in 2007, but less than a year later sided with the ISPs to fight Internet neutrality. The economic realities of digital piracy will inevitably steer most of the music industry to that same position.

And here's why: The ISPs represent the music industry's most valuable potential ally in its fight against piracy. But so far, ISPs have done virtually nothing. They've had little incentive to implement content-filtering technologies or adopt a "three strikes" graduated-response program to limit or temporarily cut off the Internet access of its infringing customers. Promising to side with the ISPs against neutrality in return for that help is a trade-off most in the music industry are eager to make.

That hasn't happened yet because the threat of meaningful Internet neutrality regulation remains too far away to force the ISPs into making such a deal. The FCC's rule-making process could take years. There's also a legal challenge from Comcast over whether the FCC is even authorized to set and enforce neutrality regulations, stemming from the FCC's censure this summer over Comcast's controversial decision to delay BitTorrent traffic on its network during peak usage hours.

Additionally, there are competing bills in Congress both for and against legislating Internet neutrality that could take even longer to resolve, assuming either ever makes it out of committee.

But should the Net neutrality movement gain real traction, the ISPs will start looking to make deals, and the music industry will be in the catbird seat ready to play its hand. Certainly there will be voices of dissent, primarily from the independent music community. But overall, major labels and music publishers are more concerned about stopping the piracy of today than fretting over the composition of tomorrow's distribution networks. ••••

UMG LICENSES MUSIC TO FREE DOWNLOAD SERVICE

Universal Music Group is licensing its catalog to a new ad-supported music download service from the Australian firm Guvera. The service, which is not yet live, will let users download music for free, which participating brands will pay for through branded channels and other methods. Users searching for a specific song will be sent to any one of several branded channels based on the song selection and the user's personal preferences, in theory allowing brands to target specific demographics with their message. The service is expected to go live in February.

Lilith Returns

The Celebrated Festival Prepares A 2010 Comeback

mong the wealth of '90s multi-act festival urs, Lilith Fair was perhaps the most unique, elebrating a diverse range of female artists and rawing attention to women's issues and char- able causes. Rebranded as the lith tour, the fest returns next ne, steered by its four found- g partners: artist Sarah Mc- achlan, Nettwerk Music Group unders Terry McBride and an Fraser, and Paradigm agent arty Diamond.

"Marty and I do talent together, arty and Dan do venues to- ther, I do all the marketing, and rah is our moral compass on literally every- ing," McBride says.

Much will remain the same. "We'll still have artists a day, five on the main stage, three on e B [stage] and three in the Village," McBride ys. "There will still be $1 per ticket going to cal charity. We'll run a local talent ntest in every single marketplace; a cal artist will open up every Lilith ow. And it will have a very diverse eup, with rock, pop, urban, Latin, zz, indie rock and a good age range, om 15-year-olds to 50-year-olds."

What's different this time around Lilith's partnership with the i4c mpaign, the debut initiative of the ar-old holding company Touchpoint ust Group, which invests in socially nscious companies. McBride says e i4c partnership will completely ange the makeup of the Village.

"Last time around, the Village was ore of a hippie-dip affair of hemp cklaces and local causes," he says. his time, we'll still have the local uses, but we'll have a very sophisti- ted Village in that the four to six cially conscious for-profit com- nies that we invest in will be e anchor tenants of our Vil- ge, connecting people with e fact that $1 per ticket has ne into investing in these for- ofit, green, conscious compa- es. Our goal is to invest, make me returns and use that as a way of support- g our nonprofits."

The idea is that profits from the socially con- ous businesses on the concourse will sus- n Lilith's charitable efforts. In 1997-99, Lilith nated more than $10 million to women's uses. "But when Lilith Fair ended, so did its aritable efforts," McBride says. "So this time 're investing in conscious, for-profit compa- s to build up a portfolio that we can have to pport our nonprofit efforts when Lilith ends."

McBride says the initial goal is to raise about million "that will create a sort of Lilith i4c nture capitalist] fund, and we'll invest in four six businesses, and those businesses will en vend on the actual tour so fans can see at they are part of."

Casey Verbeck, a former music exec who nched TouchPoint Trust Group and the i4c mpaign with partner Rich Frankenheimer, says i4c seeks to address the difficulty for these socially conscious enterprises in finding growth capital, a scenario exacerbated in the current economy. "We're tackling that issue and trying to mobilize a movement in getting commitments from the arts and entertainment community, and Lilith is the first one to step up and be part of a campaign to help support and drive awareness and dollars to support those types of enterprises."

RAY WADDELL

Some 100-120 artists will participate in Lilith, with the first batch of 30-40 performers to be announced Dec. 1. Clearly, sights are set high for talent. Among those who played Lilith Fair were then-developing acts like Christina Aguilera, Tegan & Sara and Nelly Furtado, along with first-time festival performances from Queen Latifah, Erykah Badu, Missy Elliott and Dixie Chicks. "Lilith Fair shattered boundaries of 'this can't play with this'; not only females playing with females, but music that is not genre-based," Mc Bride says.

The plan is for 35 shows in North America, another six to eight in Europe, then Asia and Australia in spring 2011. "Then we'll come back to North America and do it one more time," McBride says. "Then after that, we're thinking about taking the North American section and making it a destination: Coachella, Stagecoach [both in Indio, Calif.], then maybe Lilith would be the weekend afterward."

As for i4c, which was conceived last April, Verbeck says momentum has grown. "Obviously, Terry and Sarah got the importance of it right away, and we're just starting to reach out to other people to join us," he says. "In a lot of ways this movement is a call to action to get other artists to participate." ...

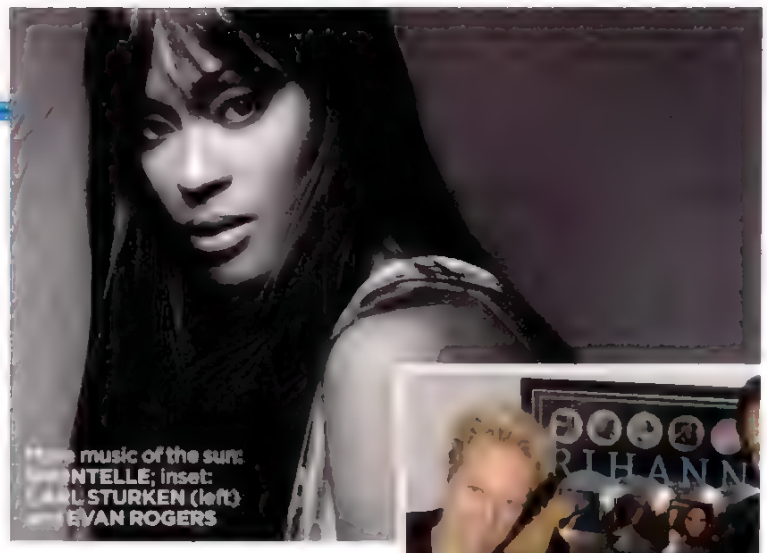
GEMA WINS LIVE FEE RISE
German authors' group GEMA has won an increase in licensing fees for live concerts. The German Patent and Brand Office arbitration tribunal in Munich approved the fee hikes Nov. 20. Concert promoters' associations IDKV and VDKD had taken the case to the tribunal after a breakdown in negotiations with GEMA (Billboard, March 14), which had sought higher rates based on sponsorship and advertising revenue as well as ticket sales. The tribunal has approved staggered rate increases through 2014. For concerts with attendance of up to 15,000, the rate (after applicable GEMA discounts) will rise to 5.8% of total revenue, up from 1.9%. For concerts with attendance of greater than 15,000, the rate will rise to 6.1%, from 3.6%.



DRONES TOP DOWN UNDER
Melbourne alternative rock act the Drones topped two key categories at the 2009 Jägermeister AIR Awards held Nov. 22 in their hometown. The band won best independent artist and best independent album for "Havilah" (ATP Recordings). The annual ceremony organized by the Australian Independent Record Labels Assn. was held at the 1,500-capacity Forum Theatre. The 500-member media/industry judging panel named singer/songwriter Bertie Blackman breakthrough artist of the year and Philadelphia Grand Jury's "Going to the Casino" (Boomtown Records/Shock) best independent single.

U2 TO MAKE GLASTO DEBUT
U2 has been confirmed as a headline act for the United Kingdom's Glastonbury Festival. The band will make its first appearance at the festival in Somerset, England, next year. U2 will break from its North American tour to play the first day of the event (June 25).

REPLICATING RIHANNA

Barbados Proves To Be A Hot Spot For Talent

There's more to Barbados than rum and Rihanna.

Just outside the Caribbean island's capital of Bridgetown, a heavily trafficked street called the St. Lawrence Gap teems with the sounds most people associate with the region. Reggae, soca and calypso bands draw tourists and locals alike into bustling clubs, as they have for decades.

But it's the 21st-century urban sound of Barbados-born Rihanna that has inspired a new wave of young Barbadian artists, with five recently securing major-label deals: Shontelle (SRC/Universal), Livvi Franc (Jive/Sony), Jaicko (Capitol/EMI), Hal Linton and Vita Chambers (both SRP/Universal Motown).

That's an impressive strike rate for an island with a population of just 280,000—and locals are swift to credit their nation's most famous R&B hitmaker.

"Rihanna has inspired a lot of Barbadian artists," says Jaicko, whose Capitol debut, "Can I . . .," drops in first-quarter 2010. "Before Rihanna, it almost seemed impossible for a Barbadian artist to get a record deal, but her success made me believe I could do it."

"Rihanna's superstar status has drawn greater attention to Barbados," says Barbadian producer Chris Allman, owner of Slam City Productions and the man behind local hits for soca stars like Rupee and Edwin Yearwood. "If she can come from here and be so successful, it stands to reason there are others who can be nearly as successful."

The duo that discovered Rihanna is New York-based production/songwriting team Evan Rogers and Carl Sturken. Both are frequent visitors to the island. They've successfully placed four Barbadian acts with U.S. majors through their production company Syndicated Rhythm Productions (SRP).

While visiting Barbados in 2004 they auditioned singers, including the then-15-year-old Rihanna, who had never sung professionally. "Rihanna had incredible presence and a very distinctive voice," Rogers recalls, "but it needed development."

The pair signed Rihanna to SRP and relocated her to New York—a crucial move, Sturken says, if an artist wants a shot at U.S. success. There, they developed her skills before placing her with Def Jam in 2005. Following Rihanna's breakthrough, the duo hit pay dirt again, signing Shontelle in 2006; by the end of the year, she'd signed to SRC/Universal Motown. Shontelle's single "T-Shirt," from her debut, "Shontelligence," peaked at No. 21 on the Billboard Hot 100 in 2008 and reached No. 6 on the United Kingdom's Official Charts Co. listing early the following year.

SRP also signed soulful crooner Hal Linton and pop-rocker Vita Chambers in 2008 and 2009, respectively. When SRP struck a label deal with Universal Motown in early 2009, they became SRP Records' first artists. Shontelle, Linton and Chambers will perform at a Sturken and Rogers-produced "Motown 50th Tribute" special televised during Fox's coverage of the Detroit Lions and Green Bay Packers football game on Thanksgiving Day.

Universal Motown president Sylvia Rhone says the artists have "worldwide appeal and cannot be pigeonholed by Barbados, ethnicity or genre."

R&B and soul have always been staples in the musical mix that makes up Barbados' domestic sound, being performed on the club scene alongside local genres plus pop, rock and even country.

But the island's live highlight is the annual soca and calypso-dominated six-week Crop Over festival in July and August. Marking the traditional end of the sugar cane harvest, it attracts thousands of overseas visitors (Billboard, Sept. 12). During Crop Over, Barbados' soca and calypso artists pick up increased local airplay and flood the island with CDs, usually self-released or on indie labels. The biggest local labels include CRS Music, which is particularly strong in regional reggae and soca acts, and pop/reggae veteran Eddy Grant's Ice Records, noted for its calypso catalog.

Slam City's Allman credits a local Crop Over hit song with helping awaken U.S. labels to Barbados' potential. Soca singer Rupee's 2002 Crop Over hit "Tempted to Touch" became a smash throughout the Caribbean and went on to be a radio hit in Canada in 2003. Rupee signed with Atlantic Records later that year and "Tempted to Touch" reached No. 3 on the Hot 100.

"Rupee's deal confirmed we have the talent [here] to be signed to major labels," Allman says.

The talent that's been scooped up recently hasn't emerged from local genres, however. Rather, these are young, often teenage acts whose styles aren't yet fully defined—offering the tantalizing possibility of being able groom a "new Rihanna."

For example, Chambers' demo, whic pushed her toward a U.S. deal, was al produced by Allman, who notes that sh was groomed through Slam City's arti development program, which helj artists refine their creative direction ar prepares them for the rigors of an inte national career.

But, as yet, the streets of Bridgetov aren't crawling with U.S. A&R me local links remain key.

Barbados-born/Florida-based arti manager Allison Hunte, for exampl says Franc was signed to Jive by seni VP of A&R Jeff Fenster in October 20(after she and co-manager Kerr Thomas-Armstrong shopped Franc labels in the States.

Hunte previously managed St. Vi cent-born soca artist Kevin Lyttle, wl had a global hit in 2003-04 with "Tu Me On" and reached No. 8 on the Bi board 200 in 2004 with his self-titled / lantic debut album.

Meanwhile, Sturken and Rogers a knowledge that their relationship wi Barbados puts them in a good positic but they know it's no longer an exclusi one. "We have a lot of respect because our success with Rihanna," Rogers sa "But it's more competitive now—the n jors are on to Barbados."

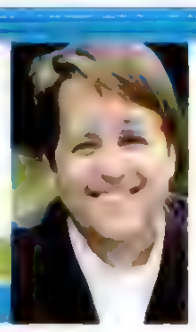
YOUNG, GIFTED AND BARBADIAN
Three Artists Relocate To The U.S. In Search Of Stateside Success

VITA CHAMBERS
Based: White Plains, N.Y.
Forthcoming release: As-yet-untitled album on SRP/Universal Motown, due out in early 2010
Booking agent: Paradigm (worldwide)

Syndication Rhythm Productions' Evan Rogers first contacted 16-year-old pop/rock singer Chambers in March—just weeks after she had posted a few songs on her MySpace page—and swiftly signed her to the company. Rogers and SRP co-founder Carl Sturken subsequently "brought in four songs that were one-listen pop radio smashes," Universal Motown president Sylvia Rhone says. "That's what made Vita a must-have artist for the label. She is unequivocally a superstar and you know it the moment she walks in the room."

JAICKO
Based: Queens, N.Y.
Forthcoming release: "Can I . . ." (Capitol), due out in early 2010
Booking agent: William Morris Endeavor Entertainment (United States)

Jaicko, 18, has been performing in Barbados with 4D People—his father Philip Forrester's band, and one of the island's most popular acts—since he was 9. He says the experience honed his singing, songwriting and performing skills. Jaicko's U.S. debut single, "Oh Yeah" (featuring Snoop Dogg), hit No. 36 on Billboard's Rhythmic Top 40 chart in November. Capitol senior director of A&R Chris Anokute says, "He's right where Chris Brown was in terms of appealing to that young, urban crossover consumer."



HAL LINTON
Based: Queens, N.Y.
Forthcoming release: "Return From the Future" (SRP/Universal Motown), due out in early 2010
Booking agent: Creative Artists Agency (worldwide)

Linton's self-produced debut album, "Spirit: Life: Love" (CRS Music), earned four wins at the 2007 Barbados Music Awards. It also helped him win financial backing from economic development agency Invest Barbados, which assisted in staging several U.S. showcases before he signed with SRP. "Hal has a unique vocal tone and soul that sets him apart from any of the male artists in the market today," Universal Motown's Rhone says. "It's like Marvin Gaye meets Maxwell meets D'Angelo meets 2010." —PM

WHAT CONVERSE LEARNED FROM ITS LOVE NOISE TOUR IN CHINA

by GEOFF COTTRILL

Converse sees itself as an advocate and catalyst or creativity. It's something that drives now we llocate all of our marketing resources. As a rand, our job is to support and celebrate the reative community around the world.

In China, we saw an opening to do just that y aligning ourselves with the country's incred-ly vibrant underground indie music scene.

There are great new bands, an energy and an dge that other cities lost long ago. What they ck is support. There isn't a touring infrastruc-re in China. There aren't any city-to-city cara-ans of tour buses and big rigs. Venues are few nd far between.

Converse saw an opportunity to work with a w of these young bands. We didn't ask them star in commercials wearing our shoes. We ask them to write jingles for us. Instead, ow them and asked what kind of help tour. We connected with two bands and created a five-city tour for them—and for us.

Our headliners, both from Beijing, were PK14, a respected pioneer of the underground scene, and Queen Sea Big Shark, a new-generation upstart. The bands didn't play in big venues, but along the way we stopped at small clubs and on street corners in Nanjing, Hangzhou, Changsha, Wuhan and Xian. As we rolled into each city, we added a local band to the bill. Each night these acts played to audiences of 200-300 people.

So, what happened along the way? Beyond buying the tour bus and coordinating the tour dates, venues and logistics, we sent a small camera crew on the road to capture the personal stories of each of the bands' members. The bus itself went from being a big white vehicle to an interactive canvas as the bands and the kids along the journey took it upon themselves to paint every inch of it. When it rolled back into Beijing it was covered in graffiti and other artistic expressions. It was a mess, but one of the most beautiful things we had ever seen. It told a story.

During the tour, the bands blogged about their journey and gave personal, on-camera interviews. We learned that these kids have something to say and just want to be heard. As China increasingly opens up, allowing its young to have a little bit more of a voice, it will free them to be more creative.

As a result of the tour, we had more than 3 million visits to our Web site in China from last December through the end of March. We've gotten more than 1.8 billion impressions through our online partners and a print and outdoor campaign. We edited the footage we shot and produced an hourlong documentary of the tour. Earlier this year, we gave away more than 100,000 DVDs of the documentary at retail stores throughout China with purchases of Converse merchandise.

Music, art and fashion are all colliding in China and what we found was inspiring and truly invigorating. We saw our consumers everywhere—onstage, in mosh pits and outside on the curb. The indie music culture and scene in China is incubating incredible talent, but it needs support and leverage for access to larger audiences.

In a society that views rock music as noise, we wanted to uncover the passion of these kids—in their own words and with their own music. This was the premise of the Love Noise tour. By supporting creativity, specifically indie rock in China, we had the opportunity to grow together with the scene, to add value and to influence this new generation.

Something very special is happening in China. Brands interested in breaking into the market should find a way of contributing to the artist community and advancing their cause—to be heard, to be young and to have some fun along the way. Make it about them. Elevate and amplify what they are doing. ••••

Collecting Society Faces Setback In Income r Copyright Tribunal Loss

DON—U.K. performers and la-y have to tighten their belts sing the first round of their ngoing beef with the country's spitality industry.

In October, the U.K. Copyright ibunal ruled that tariffs introduced by collecting society Phonographic Performance Ltd. on Jan. 2005, should be scrapped, describing the higher rates for the use recorded music as "unreasonable and unjustifiable."

That leaves PPL looking at paying millions of pounds in llected fees to the owners of ubs, bars, hotels and restaurants if its appeal, lodged Nov. 12 at e High Court in London, proves successful.

If PPL loses, trade groups the itish Hotels Assn. (BHA) and the itish Bar & Pub Assn. (BBPA) claim eir sector could benefit from refunds of up to £20 million ($33.5 illion), plus annual savings of some million ($8.4 million).

"Those sort of figures aren't out of the question," says PPL executive director Peter Leathem, who expects the appeal hearing to be held next summer.

The BHA and the BBPA both declined to comment. However, in a joint statement, BBPA chief executive Brigid Simmonds said the two groups "will be doing everything we can to ensure any appeal case is heard quickly, so that the matter of repayments can be settled as soon as possible."

PPL collects royalties on behalf of 3,400 record companies and 39,500 performers in the United Kingdom, paying out £110.3 million ($184.5 million) in 2008.

According to Leathem, the society will not ask members to return payments if it needs to refund the hospitality sector. While that's welcome news for artists and labels whose PPL income is a much-needed supplement to falling revenue from record sales, many remain concerned.

"Any cut in the revenue PPL collects on behalf of my clients will have a detrimental effect," says London-based artist manager John Taylor, who represents veteran U.K. artists Andy Fairweather-Low, Joe Brown and former Dr. Hook vocalist Dennis Locorriere.

PPL chairman/CEO Fran Nevrkla says what's really at stake is the "global issue" of parity for performers' and composers' rights.

"Why are the [U.S.] labels and performers fighting for the broadcast right?" Nevrkla asks. "Because the two sets of constituents should not be discriminated against."

The 2005 rates were, in part, intended to move PPL's fees closer to the considerably higher authors' rights fees collected by PRS for Music. However, the Copyright Tribunal rejected PPL's claims that its pre-2005 rates undervalued its music, noting that PPL had been aware of PRS' substantially higher rates when setting earlier tariffs and couldn't justifiably ask for parity now.

> 'It's not that we want people to go out of business, but 30 pence a day for worldwide repertoire? I find it outrageous.'
> —FRAN NEVRKLA, PPL

Under the 2005 rates, premises paid annually on a sliding scale, according to "audible area" floor space. Premises with a floor space of less than 100 square meters paid £100 ($167), those between 101 and 200 square meters paid £200 (£335) and so on. But under the Tribunal's new rates, all premises less than 400 square meters pay just £109.75 ($184)—the equivalent of 30 pence (50 cents) per day. That, Nevrkla says, is about half the price of a packet of peanuts in a London pub.

Taylor backs PPL's decision to appeal.

"I applaud PPL for their stance," he says. "How would [the hospitality industry] feel about the musicians whose work they use to build their businesses being able to help themselves to any of their products or services whatsoever for the same price?"

Meanwhile, Nevrkla is convinced the High Court will ultimately acknowledge the real value of recorded music.

"It's not that we want people to go out of business," he says, "but 30 pence a day for worldwide repertoire? I find it outrageous." ••••

Extreme Makeover: Pop Edition

Can Superstars Change Their Fans' Perceptions Of Them?

Making over established acts isn't an easy task. Take Shakira. She's gone from rebellious, thoughtful rocker to blonde, sexy vixen who favors erotic dancing over forceful vocals. Luis Enrique went from salsa singer to brooding singer/songwriter to salsa singer again. Gloria Estefan has traversed English, Spanish, pop and tropical roots. And then there's Thalía, the erstwhile soap star who was more TV personality than singer. For her new album, she has opted to go from histrionic to earthy (see story, page 27).

While Shakira and Thalía have undergone sonic changes, their real transformation lies in their images and how they're presented to fans.

"The visual issue is very important," says Paula Kaminski, VP of marketing for Sony Music Latin, which is releasing "Thalía En Primera Fila" Dec. 1. "It's about engaging people from the emotional side of the story."

Quick change artist: SHAKIRA

To this end, the "Primera Fila" (First Row) concept is particularly useful. The album is part of a Sony series of releases that are recorded during intimate, live performances and released separately on CD and DVD. The first "Primera Fila" was released in 2008 and featured ranchera icon Vicente Fernandez. The second, featuring Thalía—an artist who has never been known for intimate performances or even for any kind of significant touring in the United States—was a surprise.

But it offered Sony a way to attract a marquee artist who had left a longtime label and was looking for options.

"Many major acts want to be repositioned," Kaminski says, "and arrive at a moment where they ask, 'Where do I go from here?' "

For Thalía, that moment had long been coming and culminated with her last album for EMI, 2008's "Lunada," a dance-tinged, tropical-laced set that sold only 14,000 copies in the States and Puerto Rico, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

Sony then approached her with the "Primera Fila" idea. The notion, Sony Music Latin VP of A&R Paul Forat says, was to "distill the true artist behind the character, take away all those accessories she's used as crutches and expose her."

"This project is very risky," he adds. "I think that previously, people had never really sat down to listen to her sing."

It was also important to show how different Thalía was, and she goes through great pains to appear casual and relaxed on the "Primera Fila" DVD, wearing jeans, sneakers and a T-shirt and spending most of her time singing from a stool. Sony also filmed a documentary of her life story, and again, the imagery, editing and overall aesthetic of the movie attempt to convey a down-to-earth, even self-deprecating character.

The documentary will not be sold to fans. Instead, 45 minutes of footage and a handful of performances aired as a TV special Nov. 21 on Mexico's Televisa network. In the States it will air Dec. 13 on Univision, and negotiations are under way for other territories. The sale of those rights around the world—as a soap star, Thalía's popularity extends to places as far-flung as the Philippines—is part of the "Primera Fila" business model.

Sony's deal with Thalía only covers this project, and sources say the making of the special and the documentary cost close to $1 million—a rarity for a Latin project nowadays.

However, recoupment will come not only from CD and DVD sales (some 100,000 units will be shipped region-wide, including Latin America), but also sales of the TV special and a possible tour for which Thalía and Sony will go in as partners.

"The business is of a far greater scale than just album sales," Forat says. ....

Telemundo Casts Jencarlos Canela In Starring Role On Albums Chart

Life is complicated for the main character in "Más Sabe el Diablo," the top-rated Telemundo soap about a grand larcenist with a heart of gold who's in love with his one-time defense lawyer—even though she's married to his father, who's secretly also a master thief. And even as his character tries to recapture his lost love, actor/singer Jencarlos Canela made time to score a No. 2 debut on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart with extraordinary promotion on Telemundo.

Canela sang the original title theme of the soap when it premiered earlier this year, but Telemundo swapped the song for his single "Amor Quédate" in the run-up to the Nov. 10 release of his album, "Búscame." Canela's music video for the song was used for the show's opening sequence in the month leading up to release. The track is No. 17 on the Latin pop airplay chart this week.

Telemundo is also running ads in prime time for "Búscame" until early next year as part of a deal in which the network shares in his music sales. "It's a unique situation because he is the main protagonist of the show. It couldn't have been done with anyone else," Telemundo VP of music Margaret Guerra Rogers says.

The network's support was the key factor that gave Canela's independent label, Bullseye Music, "the ammunition to go toe-to-toe with the majors," CEO Rick Stevens says. The label is a partnership between former Polydor/MGM executive Stevens and two Latin music industry veterans, producer Rudy Perez and former EMI Latin chairman Marco Bissi.

Canela's feat—entering the Latin albums chart at No. 2 with a debut album distributed independently—appears to be unprecedented. "The one area where an independent can't compete is in marketing," Stevens says. "This approach of partnering with a media company is very much a part of our future."

Canela also sung the theme for another Telemundo soap, "Pecados Ajenos." Perez produced "Búscame" and played it for the network to pitch as a new theme for "Más Sabe el Diablo."

Bullseye assembled an experienced team to work Canela's album, including distribution by Select-O-Hits and sales and marketing by Venetian Marketing Group, the company formed by former Univision Music Group VP of sales Jeff Young. Bullseye hired promotion consultants like Intocable manager Alan Baxter and In-Style to do digital marketing.

Following a series of in-stores in Puerto Rico, the marketing push behind "Búscame" will continue into the first quarter, Stevens says, with a Wal-Mart "Soundcheck" performance and cross-merchandising of the album and a "Más Sabe el Diablo" DVD. The soap is airing in Mexico as part of a deal Telemundo has to air its programming on Televisa cable channels, so Bullseye is in talks with distribution partners for "Búscame" south of the border.

Stealing hearts, setting fires, singing songs: JENCARLOS CANELA

"We only had one artist and one priority, which is our goal—one artist at a time," Stevens says.

PROMUSICAE LAUNCHES NEW SITE

Spanish labels' group Promusicae has unveiled a new portal, ElPortalDeMusica.es, offering the latest charts, music streams from 60 labels, links to online download stores and editorial content in a move to encourage legal online digital payments.

"We want to dispel the urban legend that piracy exists because there is no legal alternative," Promusicae president Antonio Guisasola says.

The portal itself isn't an online store, but offers streaming and links to such legal services as YouTube, Spotify, iTunes, Yes.fm, Vodafone Music and Nokia Music Store.

In a separate announcement, culture minister Angeles González-Sinde revealed that a new Web site containing legal digital content, including millions of tracks and films with a special focus on U.S. cinema, will be inaugurated in the coming months.

The culture ministry will help finance the site, but the entertainment industry's Coalition of Creators and Content Industries will supply the content and technology.

THE BILLBOARD Q&A

WARNER MUSIC GROUP CHIEF CREATIVE OFFICER

Rob Cavallo

After returning to Warner as its new chief creative officer, the veteran producer talks about his new job and his future projects—and why he likes Meat Loaf.

Producer Rob Cavallo has made so many albums for artists signed to Warner Music Group that it has sometimes seemed like he worked there. For much of his career, he did—first in 1987 as an intern at Warner Bros. Records and eventually as a senior A&R executive, when he signed such acts as Goo Goo Dolls and Green Day.

After a few years working at the entertainment technology company Level 7, he returned to WMG in October as chief creative officer, a new position that will allow him to sign talent, produce albums and perhaps even bring some of his outside projects to the label.

In the last five years, albums Cavallo has worked on have sold more than 13 million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan—and more than double that worldwide, according to WMG. That makes him one of the most successful producers of recent years and almost certainly the top seller in rock. Although he's well-known for his long relationship with Green Day, Cavallo's projects in recent years have also included My Chemical Romance's "The Black Parade," Kid Rock's "Rock N Roll Jesus" and new albums by Shinedown, Paramore and the Dave Matthews Band.

Just because Cavallo is best-known as a producer doesn't mean he'll play that role in every project he's involved. "I always like to supply an environment where the band gets to do what they want," he says, "so that they feel comfortable doing what they want to do."

Your title is chief creative officer at Warner Music Group. What did you do to earn that title, and what does your job entail?

I was producing so much with many very different artists. Basically, [Warner Bros. Records chairman/CEO] Tom Whalley was asking, "Can you do this for me? Can you do that for me?" And [WMG chairman/CEO of recorded music for the Americas and the U.K. Lyor Cohen] took notice and said, "This guy is helping us on so many levels. If you look at the records he's working on and their affect on our bottom line and the impact they're having on the culture, we need to get him on as many things as we can because he's obviously making a big difference."

And rather than have it limited to one label or the other, it made sense for me to rove. He said, "You should be able to work for Atlantic here in the U.S. or with Warner internationally—like Maná in Mexico." And besides the production and the relationships, I have a little bit of a technology background and they were interested in bringing me into that conversation.

What were your responsibilities at Warner Bros. Records before you left to join Level 7?

I was senior VP of A&R. This is actually not that different—it's just that this is a bigger title and instead of having the resources of one label, I now work for the group. But I still sign bands. I signed the Dave Matthews Band to a distribution deal with Warner Music internationally [for its latest album, "Big Whiskey and the GrooGrux King"]. And I just signed Switchfoot to Atlantic for a 360 deal worldwide. And there may be more to come.

What was it like to work with the Dave Matthews Band, an act better-known for performing live than working in the studio?

They were on a particular road. You make your first couple of records, and it's easy because you're playing your heart out and you take it into the studio, and they just come out. And then, after a period of time, you settle into what life is like and other stuff starts to creep in. And then a band has to make a decision: Are we going to break up, or are we going to decide that this magic we make is worth fighting for? And that's what happened with the Dave Matthews Band: They decided that they really wanted to do it right this time.

The other album you just produced is the new one from Paramore, which couldn't be more different.

I fell in love with them within the first half-hour because they're a real band that's bigger than the sum of its parts. And they were actually sort of curious about me: "What's this guy like? Is he going to tell us what to do?" But production is always about what you don't do as well as what you do. So if the band is really on fire—which clearly they were—then you don't have to say anything.

That's an interesting point.

I want the studio to support what the band wants to hear back. What I think the really hard part of producing is—the noble part of producing—is getting the band to write their best songs, recognize when they've done so and guide them in how to get there. That's the trick. That's why I think Rick Rubin is so great: People say that he's not in the studio that much, but he understands how to talk to artists and how to get them to be confident in the directions they're choosing.

You're also working with Meat Loaf. How did that happen?

He just called me and said, "I need a new guy, someone who can handle my kind of music." The reason I got the call was because he had heard "American Idiot" and "The Black Parade," and both of those records have a lot of drama. They're very Meat Loaf-like. And then, once we got into the studio, it was like a love affair. To me, he has more rock'n'roll spirit in him than anybody I've ever met. He's on Universal outside of America, but right now he doesn't have a North American deal. What we've decided to do is finish it and then present it.

Your dad is Bob Cavallo, a veteran music executive who now runs Disney's music business. How much has he influenced your career decisions?

A little bit. All I really knew about it as a kid was that you could get free tickets and that he was in the home office yelling at people, so it didn't sound like that much fun to me sometimes. Then when I got older and he was managing Prince I realized, "Oh, my God, this is big stuff."

I went to USC but I didn't know what I was going to do until my dad said, "Why don't you try being an A&R guy?" At the time I was producing as a hobby—I was making little tapes at my house. Then I met with Warner and I became a listener—I would listen to 100 demo tapes a week and write reviews. And I ended up getting assigned to Black Sabbath as an A&R guy basically by default. We had to do a song for "Wayne's World," and in the middle of the production, the producer fell ill. And then about a week later I came back to L.A. and I had the finished song with me and they were like, "You can produce."

Do you still get advice from your father?

Oh, yeah, we talk all the time—most of the time about business stuff, but we occasionally talk about creative stuff because he's very much a song guy. I'm still shocked and amazed that he can do what he does. He's 70 years old and he's the guy who really picks the hits. ••••

> Production is always about what you don't do as well as what you do. So if the band is really on fire—which clearly [Paramore was when recording its new album]—then you don't have to say anything.

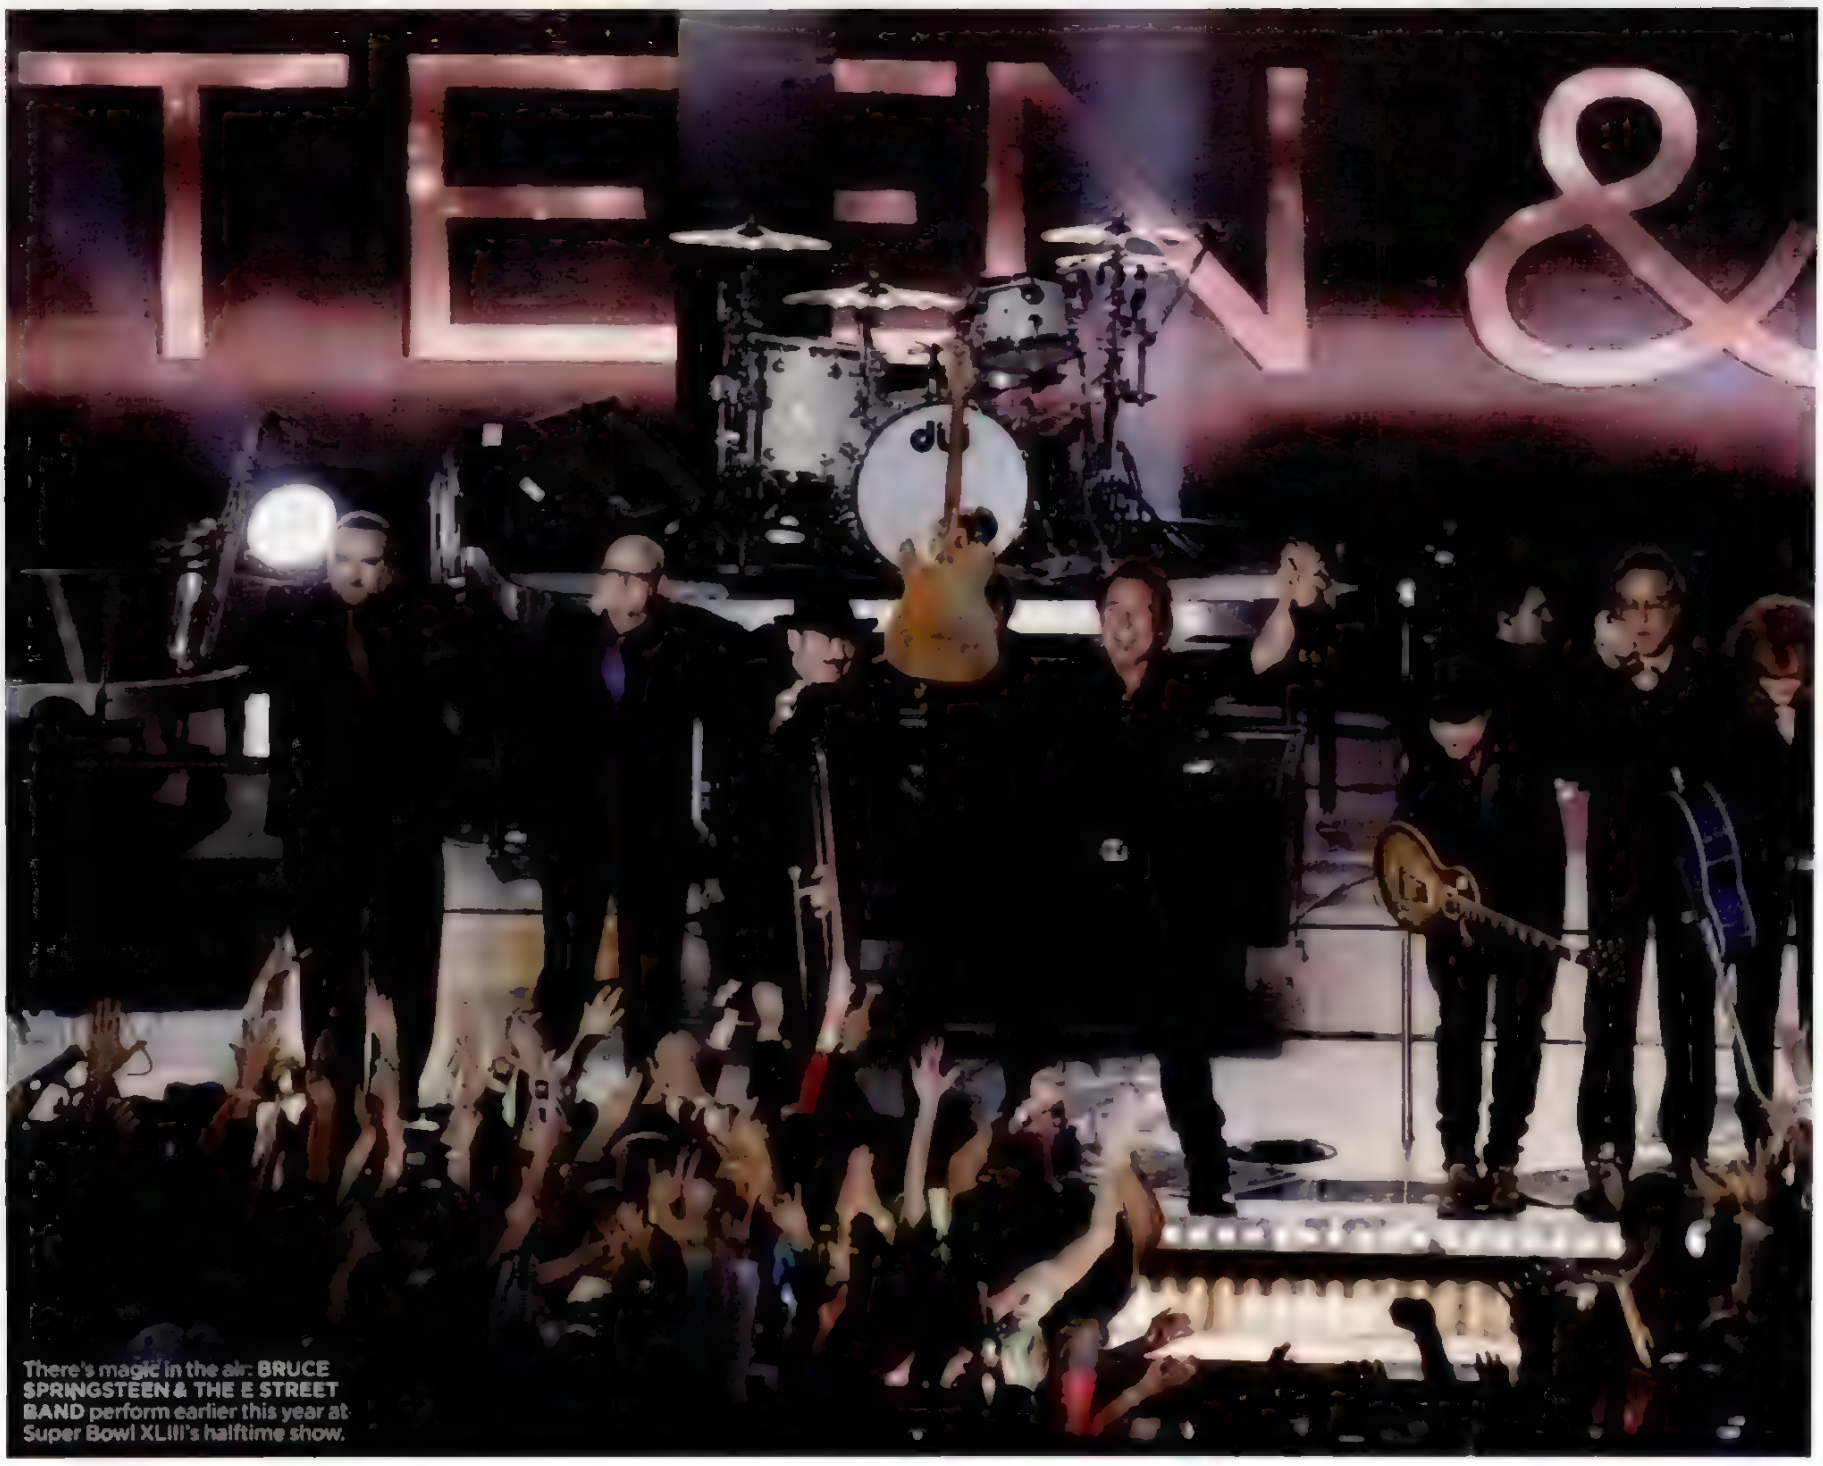
THE BILLBOARD Q&A: BY RAY WADDELL

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN

It's a cool, crisp November evening in Nashville, and yes, Bruce Springsteen knows exactly where the hell he is. ¶ It's a few days after Springsteen committed what he called "every frontman's nightmare" by confusing Michigan during an onstage callout with neighbor and rival Ohio. But if Springsteen gets mixed up occasionally as to which city or state he might be about to rock, it's understandable. ¶ Springsteen and his E Street Band have been on a global tour since 2007, through two album cycles, performances at both the Super Bowl and presidential inauguration and first-time appearances at several major festivals. Even for an artist who has largely built his career on epic shows, Springsteen and the E Streeters have found another gear. ¶ Similarly, Springsteen has been unusually prolific in the studio, releasing albums of new material in 2007 ("Magic") and this year ("Working on a Dream"), while at the same time acknowledging his beloved albums of the past by playing full sets of classic recordings in concert. On this night in Nashville his 1975 breakthrough album "Born to Run" will get the live treatment, to stunning effect. ¶ "This last year, in my point of view, was as great a year as we've ever had," longtime Springsteen manager Jon Landau says backstage at Nashville's Sommet Center. "It's fair to say I've never spent a year with him where he's not been so consistently enthusiastic, energetic. And Bruce is one of those guys who leads by example. When you're working with him, if you're a collaborator, a manager or in the band, you can't be doing less than 1,000%. You wouldn't like yourself if you didn't dig as deep as he's digging." ¶ Springsteen is indeed digging deep, but in his dressing room prior to the show, he laughs it off. "We were talking about it the other day—we said, 'I don't know if we've been this busy since 1985, or ever,' " he says. "It's just the way things worked out. Some of those things we planned and some of them just happened." ¶ Four nights before this marathon trek is set to end in Buffalo, N.Y., Springsteen isn't fatigued, but excited about his own future and that of his E Street Band. What the Boss is most concerned about is his pending show, blowing the roof off yet another house as he rolls on in front of this speeding train. And this Springsteen will do, repeatedly assuring the ecstatic crowd that he knows he's in Nashville, Tenn.—and is thrilled to be there.

The last couple of years for you have been pretty exceptional in terms of productivity, both live and in the studio.



I've been prolific with my songwriting, so I've been able to just get more music out there, which is something I always wanted to do. I found my 50s to be very, very fruitful. The songs came—I don't want to say easy—but they came in a continuous flow. I had a lot of things I wanted to write about, so it allowed us to record quite a bit, and then back it up with the touring.

Really, with the end of these shows, we're coming to the end of a decade-long project with the band that really was a tremendous renewal of the power, the strength and the service that our band hopefully provides. It's just been a great 10 years, not just the past couple. A decade ago I wasn't quite sure if I wrote in a style that was suited to the band anymore. I wasn't quite sure how we functioned as a unit. And to sort of see the whole thing just have so much vitality and power and strength, it's just one of the sweetest chapters in our entire time together.

I remember as a kid waiting three years for the release of "Darkness on the Edge of Town" in 1978. Why so prolific now?

Looking back, when you look at "Tracks" [1999's boxed set of unreleased songs] I guess I always wrote them. For every record we released there was a record I didn't release. I think at the time I was very interested in shaping what I was about, what I wanted to be. I was very cautious in my releases and I wanted my records to have very strong identities and be about a very particular thing.

The nice thing about where we are now, the rules are much fewer and far between. You can really record anything you like. This past decade I had this huge folk band that I toured and recorded with, and that was a wonderful experience. I toured solo and I loved that, and then to have the [E Street Band] at full power, I can do all these things now and I can really record whatever kind of music comes into my mind. Who you are and what you do is already established, so you don't have those identity concerns that you had back in the day.

So you were less cautious about it and just turned it loose?

You become better at discerning your good songs from your not-as-good songs. The writing process is shorter, because you refine what you leave in and what you leave out. You're able to do more work in a compressed amount of time without the quality suffering in any way.

Why work the road so hard for so long? Isn't it a grind?

I can't say I experience it as a grind. Of course, you're flying in, you're flying out, you're driving, but I really like the people that I do this with, I like being with them onstage and off, I enjoy the time we spend traveling together, and I enjoy the work that we do.

If you're a sports figure, your prime passes at such a young age. There's no ceiling here. I believe if you come and see us now, you're seeing the best E Street Band that's ever played; it just continues to improve. Not that you don't get tired or fatigued, but no matter how tired you are, when you're onstage during the night there's always this point that you go, "Oh, my God, this is just wonderful."

When did you start taking the requests from the audience?

People would always bring signs, and we'd say, "Let's do that one, let's do that one." But then somewhere along the way, I believe it was at the very end of the Magic tour, we just started to do more of it, and people started to bring more signs. Then we started to take unusual requests, and we started to do things sometimes that we'd never played before, just depending on the common memory that the band would have from everyone's individual playing experience as teenagers. And then we ended up with a system where we can jump on a lot pretty quick.

How many songs are in your arsenal?

Since the Magic tour, I think we've done upwards of 150-160 songs, maybe more, because we do a lot of things just once.

I was told you played 43 different songs at the Spectrum in Philadelphia over the four nights.

Yeah, we did a different show every night, and a third to half of it was different. If you see t two or three nights in a row at some of the stands that we do, you may hear 35-50 diffe ent songs. That's just something we're ab to do. It's a combination of the old bar ban experience and something I just ask the gu to do. We have a little bit of a set list, and I fo low the end of it and I follow the beginnir of it. Then there's a little section in there whe it just slips and slides.

It depends on what's going on with the a dience on any given night and what I think th band can pull off. It allows the fans to ha input into the show in a way that just pum the blood into everything and enlivens th evening. We've done stuff by the Ramones, th Clash and Tommy James.

Was it always a focus from early in yo career—even during your time in the ba Steel Mill—to make the live shows specia

But to do that, to draw 1,000-2,000 people ad to be able to grab people instantaneously ith music they hadn't heard. It had to be ıg, and that's what led us into "Rosalita," Kitty's Back," "Thundercrack."

Those kinds of songs were actually the final roducts of long, almost prog-rock things that did coming out of Steel Mill, where there ere time changes and arrangement changes.
ɔ they were sort of me bringing what I did ith Steel Mill into my recording life, with ıe soul and R&B influences that I used when first started to record. If you heard "Rosita" and had never heard the record, it still orks. If you heard "Kitty's Back" and had ever heard the record, it still works. They ıst swing and move and excite in a way.

When and why did you decide you were going to perform full-album sets?

It was like, "OK, what can we do that we haven't done?" There were some people who were starting to do it and my audience fundamentally experienced all my music in album form. People took "Born to Run" home and played it start to finish 100 times; they didn't slip on a cut in the middle. It was a different era in the way that people heard and experienced music.

And when we made albums, we took a long time, and we built them to last. The idea is, "There's no stinkers on this thing." And we spent months or years or whatever it took to try to make sure that was so. So the albums play real well, and I think when you hear it [live] you go, "Wow, I can't believe all those songs were on one record," whether it's "Darkness" or ["The Wild, the Innocent & the E Street Shuffle"]. Those are records that are packed with things that have lasted 30-35 years. It simply was an idea of a way to revitalize the show and make it something that was appealing and fun for the fans, but it ended up being a much bigger emotional experience than I thought it would be.

"The Wild, the Innocent & the E Street Shuffle" would seem a challenging task to just go up and whip out onstage.

We knew most of the stuff on "Wild & Innocent." I think we ran over "Wild Billy's Circus Story"—I made sure the guys got much closer to the parts that were on the record. We added a horn section and a string section. We played that in New York City, so it was this very eclectic, colorful, big night of music, and there's only seven songs on it.

1980's double-album, "The River"—that's a lot to tackle.

That was a trip. We had to learn a few things for that. That was basically a rock band record, but it went on for 20 songs. Before you do it, you don't know how it's going to come out. But it worked on the record, and I sequenced the record to feel like a live show. So you have four fast songs and a couple of ballads.

It played real well when we went to play it. It's fun being surprised, learning "Cadillac Ranch" and "I'm a Rocker," which I remember always worked well on the record, and bang, it just whiplashed you onstage. It was, "Oh, yeah, that works great." So we were kind of having a first-time experience the same way the audience was. Those were great, memorable shows.

Any thoughts on what you might do with some of these shows, like a DVD or album set?

We didn't have any plans, we just planned to do it in performance. They've been filmed. I don't know if they've been filmed to put out.

No one in your camp has said anything about it, but this tour has felt really celebratory, with so many milestones. Not to put you on the spot, but does this feel like it might be the last run for the E Street Band?

No. We don't even really think of it. The only thing that came into my mind was a decade ago, when I hit 50, I was onstage in Philadelphia, and you realize, "OK, this is exactly where I want to be right now. I wouldn't want to be any place else." You realize there is a finiteness to it.

We're playing to an audience now that will outlive us. There will be a seed of an audience out there tonight that's just going to outlive the band. But at the same time, the band is very, very powerful right now. And part of the reason it's powerful is that it's carrying a lot of very strong cumulative history. You come and you see 35 years of a speeding train going down the track and you're going to get to be on the front end of it. We look forward to many, many more years of touring and playing and enjoying it.

It has to be very instinctive now after all these years.

They're paying for you to be live, present in full, right tonight at this moment. I think there's always this sense of, if you're 15, 19, 24 or 60, you come and you say, "There's Clarence Clemons and I get to stand next to him like I did 35 years ago." That's the continuity of just still being there, and for us and for the audience that's a powerful thing. It threads your life together and that's what we wanted to do—we wanted to make music that threaded through your life as well as ours.

Some bands crumble under that sort of weight of common experience.

It depends on who you are and how you see it. Some of it is just DNA, your personality and how you were built. This was just something that we were built to do in a particular way. The difficult parts of it took its toll on different people. Every band has had personal difficulties, ups and downs, people fell into bad things, got out of bad things, maybe not as much as some other bands, but we've had our share. We spent a decade apart, and so all of those things are a part of our experience, too.

But I think, particularly when we got back together in the late '90s, everyone realized, "This has been a special part of my life and I want it to continue to be so." And all of the incidental baggage completely sort of got left behind.

I think the band has a sort of unspoken code where people looked out for the other guy. We lost one member through illness [Federici died of melanoma in 2008], but, hey, that's something that happens to you around a certain age. What I was most proud of was my guys were alive 35 years down the road, in good shape. Clarence struggled with some physical things for carrying around all that "Big Man" for all these years, but he's done great on this tour. That was something I was very, very proud of—the band was intact.

What haven't you done that you'd still like to do?

What I want to do is what I'm doing, except I want to do it a little better tonight than I did last night. I want to write some better songs, some more good songs, some songs that feel vital to mine and my audience's life today. We've made records over the past 10 years that have found as integral a place in my fans' lives as any the records from my past days. You come out and a lot of those young kids don't start singing along until they hear "The Rising." I'm just looking forward to doing what I'm doing, looking forward to going out there in an hour and looking into those faces like I've done over the past 35 years. ••••

THE MAN BEHIND THE BOSS

Jon Landau Reflects On Springsteen's Banner 2009

In a 35-year career studded with highlights, 2009 has been one for the books for Bruce Springsteen and, by association, his longtime manager Jon Landau.

Beginning with the Magic tour in October 2007 through the Working on a Dream tour, Springsteen and his E Street Band reported 171 headlining shows that grossed $388,411,273 and sold 4,127,466 tickets in North America and Europe, according to Billboard Boxscore. That doesn't include the one-off events like Bonnaroo in Tennessee and Glastonbury and Hyde Park in the United Kingdom.

"Then we came back here, and they've been doing the individual albums, which has been incredibly rewarding for us, very emotional every night," Landau says. "Then, culminating with Bruce's extraordinary appearance at the Rock Hall of Fame concerts [in New York] and the Kennedy Center Honors coming up in December, for which Bruce is one of the youngest people to ever receive the lifetime achievement award. It's hard to top a year like that."

Great year, yes, and a great decade, particularly in terms of touring. Springsteen is fourth among all acts at the box office this decade, topped only by the Rolling Stones, U2 and Madonna, whose ticket sales are generally well higher than the price of a Springsteen ticket. Springsteen has rung up $869 million and 8,236,586 tickets sold to 264 shows reported since 2000, according to Boxscore.

But rather than trailing off, Springsteen is adding to his glory days as this tour winds down. In one week, he performed at the Hall of Fame show; did two tour stops in Washington, D.C., and Charlotte, N.C.; and played "The Wild, the Innocent & the E Street Shuffle" and "The River" in their entirety at New York's Madison Square Garden on consecutive nights. "Here's a guy coming to the end of a [two-plus-year] tour, and in one week he did five absolutely distinctive and unique performances," Landau says. "This is the time in tours where some people start easing out of it, and he's on fire."

The full album sets seem to have added juice to the tour. Asked if there were any thoughts of releasing some of these performances, perhaps as a boxed DVD or CD set, Landau laughs and says, "Management has thought of that, but I have nothing further to say about it."

As for that "Darkness on the Edge of Town" deluxe reissue package Landau told Billboard about in January, he says, "It's coming. It's still a work in progress."—RW

Mixed Tidings

RETAILERS LOOK TO STRONG MUSIC RELEASE SCHEDULE FOR HOLIDAY CHEER

BY ED CHRISTMAN

Here's an early Christmas miracle: Some music merchants are relatively bullish about the holiday selling season. ¶ Yes, the economy still casts a long shadow over consumer spending. And the decline in recorded-music sales so far this year is keeping pace with last year's slide, leaving other distributors and retailers wary of what the final weeks of the year will bring. ¶ Still, the sentiment is quite a contrast from last year, when retailers were talking doom and gloom (Billboard, Dec. 6, 2008), despite record label optimism that later proved to be misplaced. ¶ "Our sales turned positive in September and October, and if you look at Hastings Entertainment historically, if we have a good September and a good October, it will be a good holiday season," says Dan Crow, VP of finance for the Amarillo, Texas-based chain, which runs 150 multimedia entertainment stores. ¶ In its third fiscal quarter ended Oct. 31, Hastings' merchandise sales were up 2% on a comparable-store basis from a year earlier, while video rentals were up 4.1%. ¶ Other merchants also say business started picking up around the same time. In October, Newbury Comics "sold more CDs and DVDs combined than the year before," CEO Mike Dreese says. ¶ Despite continuing economic uncertainty and a stubbornly high unemployment rate in the United States, there are some signs of optimism for the holiday season. The International Council of Shopping Centers is forecasting a 1% comparable-store gain for chain stores. And an American Express survey of card holders found that 10% intended to spend more than last Christmas while another 43% said they would spent at least the same amount.

STRONG SLATE OF NEW RELEASES

Sure to contribute to his holiday season's sales performance is that everyone will be going up against abysmal numbers from 2008, when album sales during the last seven weeks of the year plunged 19% in the United States from the same period a year earlier, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

A strong release schedule is another key factor fueling holiday hopes. A slew of high-profile albums hit U.S. store shelves this week, including Rihanna's "Rated R," Lady Gaga's "The Fame Monster," Adam Lambert's "For Your Entertainment," Shakira's "She Wolf," Susan Boyle's "I Dreamed a Dream" and Birdman's "Priceless."

They join other recent releases that are sure to be on the minds of gift buyers, such as 50 Cent's "Before I Self-Destruct," Bon Jovi's "The Circle," John Mayer's "Battle Studies," Norah Jones' "The Fall," Carrie Underwood's "Play On," Weezer's "Raditude," Jay Sean's "All or Nothing," "Glee: The Music, Vol. 1" and "This Is It," the soundtrack to the movie that has become Michael Jackson's swan song.

Retailers are also banking on other highly anticipated releases that are due before Christmas, including Lil Wayne's "Rebirth," Mary J. Blige's "Hip Hop Soul," R. Kelly's "Untitled," "Glee: The Music, Vol. 2," Juvenile's "Cocky and Confident," Alicia Keys' "The Element of Freedom," Chris Brown's "Graffiti," Eminem's "Relapse: Refill" and Timbaland's "Shock Value 2."

A bit of skepticism about some of those latter titles may be in order, given that expected album releases by U2, Eminem and 50 Cent failed to materialize during last year's holiday season. "Rebirth," Lil Wayne's follow-up to his 2008 blockbuster "Tha Carter III," promises to be one of the holiday season's biggest sellers. But its release has already been delayed numerous times this year.

"I see a Lil Wayne one-sheet and we will see if that comes out," says Carl Mello, head of purchasing at Newbury Comics, who adds that while the release schedule for the remainder of the year looks strong, "it remains to be seen if it all comes out."

An executive at another retail chain is more skeptical. "I will believe Lil Wayne is coming out when I see the product," he says.

In addition to hit product, merchants and label executives say they expect continued robust sales for Jackson and the Beatles, who have sold a combined 9 million units in the United States so far this year, sparked by Jackson's death June 25 and EMI Music's reissue of the Fab Four's catalog in September.

But not everyone is optimistic that holiday shoppers will bring good tidings. Alliance Entertainment president Alan Tuchman says he has low expectations for music because stores are carrying less inventory and devoting less floor space to it. Hastings' Crow says the chain has reduced its music inventory by 20% this year in about 40 of its stores.

Meanwhile, Borders recently completed efforts to reduce music shelf space at its locations. Previously, all of the chain' stores carried about 9,000 titles. But earlier this year, the chai split its stores into four tiers, with some stores carrying onl 50 titles, others stocking 1,300 titles, a third tier maintainin about 6,000 titles and a much smaller group of stores keepin fully stocked music departments with about 13,000 titles.

In addition to the loss of floor space at brick-and-mortar re tailers, music sales are also being pressured by the continue slide in CD sales and the slowing of digital sales growth, accorc ing to a major-label distribution executive. While some in th industry maintain that music is recession-proof, this distribu tion executive argues that it's not in the current environment

Pricing also will be a big factor during the holiday sellin season. Much like last year, some merchants started Black Fr day-themed advertising in early November. By the secon week of the month, merchants like Sears, Kmart and J& Music World were conveying the message that there was n need to wait until Black Friday because their stores were a ready offering low prices.

The Web site BlackFriday.GottaDeal.com has posted info mation about Black Friday sales showing that Best Buy wi price the latest album releases by Norah Jones, Bon Jovi, Ca rie Underwood and others for $6.99 and that Target will se more than 60 CDs at $6.50 each. But the site also shows th not all retailers will be slashing prices on hit CDs, revealin that Kmart will sell CD titles by top artists for $9.99.

As brick-and-mortar merchants gear up for Black Friday, or line merchants appear poised to enjoy strong sales on Thank giving Day, when most of the Black Friday advertising come out, according to Tuchman at Alliance, which does product fu fillment for online merchants.

"Our distribution center is open on Thanksgiving," Tuchma says. "I expect sales to start earlier and last all weekend, so I e pect the sales activity to last longer and produce more sales."

As physical music sales continue to shift to online me chants, Amazon will again be the big winner this holiday se son, Tuchman says.

After Christmas, Universal Music Group Distribution pre ident/CEO Jim Urie says he is expecting huge download sale thanks to massive iTunes gift card redemptions. In past year the download weekly average has been known to grow sharp during January. Apple declined to comment.

COMPETITION FROM MOVIES, BOOKS, GAMES

While big boxes have commonly used music in years past as key holiday traffic driver, its profile will continue to shrink th year, ceding more ground to movies and videogames. Movi and books, in particular, will boast attractive price points th could further distract consumer attention from music.

"Music will have a smaller [footprint] in the hot spots of th store and, more importantly, in the circular," Urie predicts.

Indeed, according to BlackFriday.GottaDeal.com, the Wal-Mart circular for Thanksgiving doesn't even include music, even though it prominently features books, movies and videogames.

As the big boxes continue to rely less on music to bring holiday shoppers into stores, bargain-priced Blu-ray players and flat-screen TVs are expected to be the big traffic generators this year. Home entertainment software retailers are hoping that cheaper pricing for Blu-ray players and movies will finally drive sales growth for the format, with BlackFriday.GottaDeal.com showing that Best Buy will offer Black Friday specials on Blu-ray versions of movies like "I Am Legend" and "The Departed" for $7.99. Meijer's will have 24 Blu-ray titles at $9, Target will have select Blu-ray items at $7.99, and Wal-Mart will have 30-plus Blu-ray titles priced at $10.

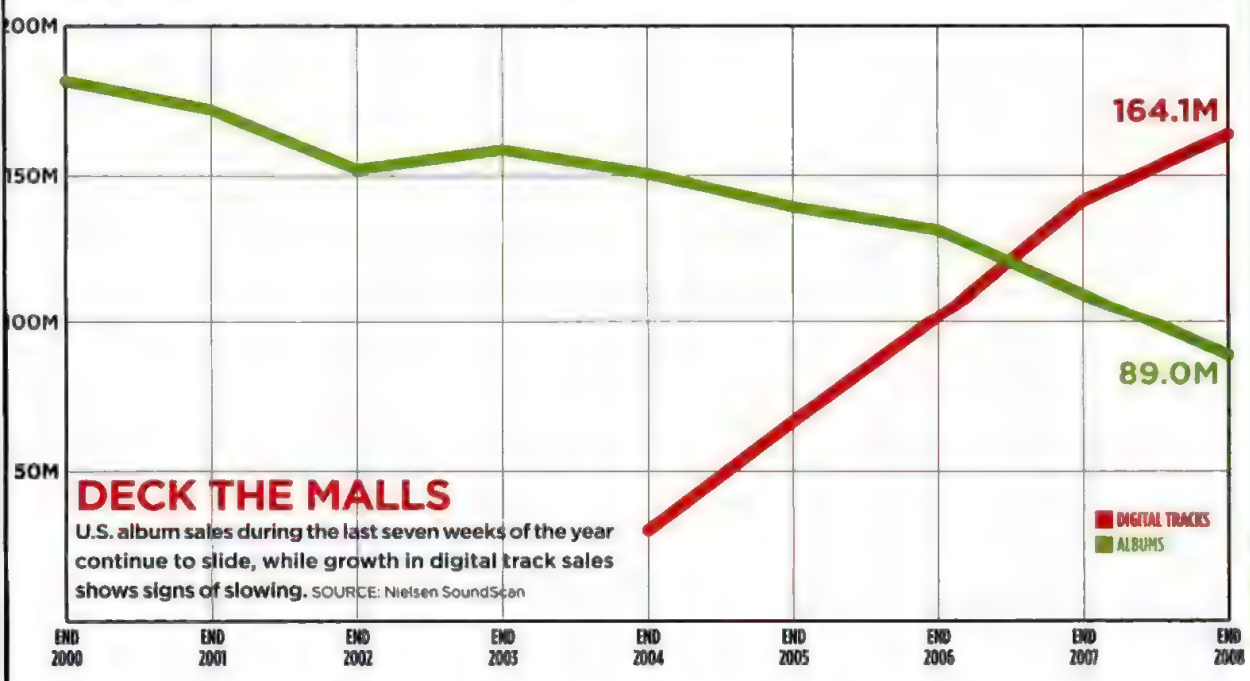
"It's a good two-prong approach, with Blu-ray hardware and software both priced very promotionally," the head of one retail chain's movie and videogame department says. "Because of this pricing, Blu-ray has to catch hold this fourth quarter."

But a major-label distribution executive says he believes low holiday pricing for Blu-ray is a sign that studios are trying to sell off dead inventory.

"All the retailers have dedicated all this extra space to Blu-ray, taking it away from music, and it's done nothing for them," he says, adding that merchants should put music back in that space.

Beyond Blu-ray, merchants say there will be plenty of Black Friday deals on DVD catalog as well, with some titles available for as low as $1.99. Indeed, once again merchants say movies will own the front of the store, thanks to the pricing promotions that the studios put together for the fourth quarter.

At those prices, even heavily discounted CDs will have a tough time vying for the attention of holiday shoppers.



The videogame department will see plenty of traffic too. Activision's "Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2" will go toe to toe with Nintendo's "New Super Mario Bros. Wii" for sales supremacy. And "Guitar Hero: Van Halen" will be released Dec. 22 and is expected to enjoy brisk Christmas week sales.

On the other hand, merchants say they have been disappointed with sales of "The Beatles: Rock Band." "They should offer a rebate and let us cut pricing so we can get rid of inventory," one merchant says.

Big boxes are also engaged in a knock-down, drag-out price war over books. Amazon, Target and Best Buy are offering hardcover best sellers for $8.99 and $9.99, well below cost.

If the big-box price wars over books and movies continues, a distribution executive predicts further pain for multimedia merchants, which could soon be stuck with two more unprofitable product categories besides music.

He's not alone in that concern. Russ Solomon, founder of now-defunct Tower Records and owner of the Sacramento, Calif., indie store R5, says the ultra-low pricing of best-selling books feels distressingly familiar. "Here you have Target and Wal-Mart moving to wreck the book industry," Solomon says, "just like they wrecked the music industry." •••• of product may be better than having too much for the holiday selling season.

Twice Shy

Sources say retailers are becoming more conservative with inventory, something that would normally be a cause for concern. But this time around, distribution execs are sighing with relief.

Last year, music merchandisers loaded up on inventory for the holiday selling season before the economy went south. As the recession deepened, most merchants either didn't realize the depth of the downturn or stubbornly stuck to the belief that music sales were recession-proof.

The result was heavy discounts in December and a high rate of returns the following January, hurting the income statements of labels and merchants.

This year, retailers are already recycling inventory—that is, returning slow-moving titles and/or moving inventory out of overstocked stores into outlets where the merchandise is needed, according to a major-label distribution executive. "When we get into January, we won't have to duck from all the returns," he says. "It's a thoughtful holiday from an inventory-management standpoint."

However, tight inventory could be problematic if there's a last-minute rush from shoppers. If that happens, the beneficiaries will be merchants like [illegible] uct and normally carry a wider breadth of music inventory.

"This year will be a home run for any retailer with inventory on the shelf," Newbury Comics CEO Mike Di[illegible] "We are seeing what's on with inventory at Borders and Best Buy, so we are finally getting the benefits of last man standing."

CASTING CROWNS

As the seven members of the Atlanta-based band Casting Crowns settle into the front of one of their tour buses, they are all warm and friendly, eager to share the latest photos of their kids and happenings at their churches. If they seem more like your child's favorite teacher, your next-door neighbor or a local youth group worker, it's because they are. They'd be the first to tell you they are unlikely pop stars—and therein lies their charm.

✚ The act is getting ready to sound-check for an appearance where the band will join Amy Grant, Michael W. Smith and MercyMe at Nashville's Loveless Barn to raise money for the Gospel Music Assn. (GMA). Just a couple of days earlier the group played the Sommet Center, Nashville's downtown arena, drawing an enthusiastic crowd anxious to hear new music from its Nov. 17 release, "Until the Whole World Hears."

✚ Casting Crowns is the top-selling act in Christian music, earning the No. 1 slot on Billboard's Top Christian Album Artists year-end tally for the past two years. The release of "Until the Whole World Hears"—which sold 167,000 copies in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan, landing it at No. 4 on the Billboard 200—cements the band's status as the genre's leader. It's a fact that's even more remarkable because the group hasn't yet achieved a crossover hit.

Casting Crowns' 2003 self-titled debut has sold 1.7 million units, according to Nielsen SoundScan, spawning such hits as "Voice of Truth" and "Who Am I." The band followed with 2005's "Lifesong," which has sold 1.2 million units. "The Altar and the Door," released in 2007, has sold 949,000 copies. Along the way, the act has also issued a 2008 Christmas collection, "Peace on Earth," and three live projects.

It's the group's deep connection with the lives of its fans—it literally practices what it preaches—that is behind its consistent success. The members continue to work at their local churches; they schedule recording and touring around their church commitments, making sure they are home for Sunday and Wednesday services. Though such dedication might seem an obstacle to career advancement, it hasn't been for the group. Casting Crowns has won 23 GMA Dove Awards, a Grammy, an American Music Award and numerous other accolades.

"From the outset of their recording career Casting Crowns has remained faithful to their mission as part of the youth ministry of the churches they serve," Provident Music Group president/CEO Terry Hemmings says. "As a full-time youth pastor, [lead vocalist/primary songwriter] Mark Hall lives life with his 400 teenagers and their families each week, and the songs are born of that everyday experience. Such authenticity and purpose provides life-impacting lyrics that truly connects on a deep level with audiences."

CALL TO ACTION

Hall and the rest of the band—Megan Garrett, Brian Scoggin, Hector Cervantes, Chris Huffman, Melodee DeVevo and her husband, Juan—are firm believers in putting faith in action, and that philosophy fuels "Until the Whole World Hears," the band's fourth studio album. "We really want to see believers kind of step out of their chairs, get out of the pews and get involved in what God is doing," Hall says.

One of the new album's most poignant songs, "Always Enough," was written when a member of Hall's church was killed in Afghanistan. "His son, Christopher, is in our middle-school ministry and his wife, Crystal, is a part of our church," Hall says. "We were on the other side of the country and couldn't be there for the funeral. We were on tour and couldn't cancel, so we were stuck. I remember sitting on the bus that night praying with our family and thinking, 'I need to be there for them. Why can't I be there for them?' That's really the message of the song. You can be there for someone, but there comes a point where Jesus just has to be enough."

"At Your Feet" is a worship song that features Cervantes and Juan DeVevo joining Hall on vocals. "Blessed Redeemer" showcases Melodee DeVevo on lead vocals. "The words were written in the 1920s to that hymn and Mark changed the melody to it," DeVevo says of the band's reinterpretation of the classic.

"Until the Whole World Hears" also includes such reinventions as "Joyful, Joyful" and "Glorious Day (Living He Loved Me)" from the hymn "One Day." "That song is basically about the life of Jesus," Huffman says of "Glorious Day." "When you have a song like that where you don't really sing about any of your own troubles, you are just singing every word about Jesus, people's hands go up and it's amazing to see everybody's reaction when you play it live."

Hall enjoyed experimenting with the classics. "You can really do a lot of cool things when you are rearranging hymns," he says. "With the song 'One Day' and 'Blessed Redeemer,' those are songs that people aren't going to sing much anymore, but those lyrics are strong. I grew up with the hymnbook. That's all I knew, so it's cool to bring them back."

THE POWER OF THE CHRISTIAN CONSUMER

At first, when the group came together, it looked like Casting Crowns had all the odds stacked against it. It has seven members, more than the average band. Frontman Hall was an over-30 youth pastor, and the act was being produced by Mark Miller, lead vocalist for the veteran country group Sawyer Brown, who didn't have a track record in Christian music. He had just launched the Beach Street Records imprint and partnered with Provident Music Group.

"He picked an unusual path—he waited until his career should have been over," Miller says of Hall's late entry into the music business. "Then you hook him up with a country guy that produces the record and everything shouldn't work. Everything that we do is so unorthodox; it just shouldn't work, including the numbers. That's when I attribute 100% to God's provision."

However, what might not have looked like it added up on paper began adding up at the cash registers. "All our CDs have three elements," Hall says. "You're always going to hear, 'God loves you, he's pursuing you'—and you're going to hear the gospel."

The success of Casting Crowns also demonstrates the power of the Christian consumer. "Believers buy groceries and they buy CDs," Hall says. "They buy all kinds of stuff."

And although the band hasn't had a crossover hit, Miller thinks Casting Crowns has mass appeal. "People buy their records that don't buy Christian records," he says. "People go to their concerts that don't necessarily go to Christian concerts. You don't sell that many records just to the Christian community. You aren't going to do those kind of numbers."

The band admits to feeling pressure to succeed with each successive release. "You can play it off like you don't feel it, but who doesn't want to be liked?" Hall asks. "There is definitely a lot of pressure that people are expecting something now. I tell myself constantly that if God wants us to keep writing songs, he'll keep giving us songs, and I have to remind myself that a lot."

Thus far, it doesn't look like Hall and the band need worry. A presale campaign has been going well, and the title track has been blazing up Billboard's Hot Christian Songs chart, sitting at No. 2 for a fourth straight week and selling 53,000 downloads, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

Hall says the group was late in finishing up the album, so there wasn't any advance music to listen to at first—initially retailers were just selling air. "A lot of Christian retailers and mainstream retailers just believed in us. To us, it's such an encouragement that they decided, 'Hey, we believe in what you do, so we're going to just sell it,' " he says. "People appreciate what we do and they know if we're going to make a record, we're not going to just make noise. We're going to talk about things that matter, and we've seen a lot of trust with our industry."

Miller says that trust is based on Casting Crowns' track record. "The message is real. Mark Hall makes no bones about who they are and what they sing about and he never has," he says. "Even if you are a believer or a nonbeliever, you respect that and you are drawn to that honesty. When I go to their concerts, I walk around and I want to see who is there and I see everything from a family of six to kids with fishhooks in their eyebrows. You see a little bit of everything and that's mainstream, that's middle America buying albums."

CONNECTING ONLINE

The band stays connected to middle America through an interactive Web site that features videoclips, blogs from the band members and their crew, and Twitter. "It's a great tool to have," Juan DeVevo says.

Provident Label Group senior VP of marketing Ben Howard agrees. "Our new CrownsFans.com Web site is focused on the relationship with fans of Casting Crowns' music, ministry and message," he says. "It will be a media-rich site filled with fan features including extensive video, the band's entire discography and exclusive content."

In addition, Casting Crowns was a featured act on Yahoo Early Edition, which streamed the record for seven days before the release date.

According to Howard, fans can use Twitter, Facebook and e-mail to send links to their favorite songs, which are being streamed on CrownsFans.com. The band's entire catalog of music, as well as all the video from live DVD releases, is also available for streaming.

Hall is particularly active and revealing on Twitter: When someone corrected his spelling on a recent tweet, he responded "You've officially picked on a dyslexic. Now go kick a puppy! :)"

"I'm dyslexic and have ADD and I'm a poster kid for all those things, so it makes our experiences on the stage very adventurous," he says. "You never know what's going to happen." During the Nashville arena show, he warned the audience that with his ADD, he might forget the words to the songs he wrote. Pointing to the stage in front of him, he said there was a teleprompter with his lyrics, but being dyslexic he couldn't read them anyway.

He's even enlisted his Twitter followers in a weight loss challenge he's calling "Casting Pounds." "All of us are signing on to a weight loss challenge," Hall says. "We've done it on Twitter and if you want to follow, the challenge is out. We're hardcore into that now."

Howard expects the band's fall tour to help drive sales of the new CD. The 40-city the Whole World Hears tour wraps up Dec. 4, and to date 125,000 fans have attended, according to the label. That's also reflected in the band's live DVD sales: The RIAA has certified "Live From Atlanta" and "Livesong Live" platinum and "The Altar and the Door Live" is certified gold.

Fans will see a different tour lineup for Casting Crowns this time out; for Scoggin, replacing longtime drummer Andy Williams (who exited to join his wife's band Soul Sister Sally) has meant an opportunity to become part of an organization he'd long admired.

"I've known Mark and the band for several years now, but the cool thing about being a part of Casting Crowns is it's not just a band. It's a group of people who are the real deal, who are really living it seven days a week—not just tour buses and catering, but churches, people and ministries," he says. "So it's been a real honor to use some of the gifts that God has given me—communicating and making disciples of people. It's been a real blast."

CASTING CROWNS TEAMS WITH CHRISTIAN RETAILER FOR CHARITY PRESALE PROMOTION

For every copy of Casting Crowns' new album "Until the Whole World Hears" presold through Family Christian Stores' Web site or one of the chain's 294 brick-and-mortar locations, the retailer is donating 10% of the purchase price to feed children in Haiti through the James Fund.

Launched by Family Christian Stores in 2003, the James Fund is a nonprofit foundation that aids widows and orphans. "We're selling the idea of a great album and the reputation of an incredible band," says Steve Biondo, president of the James Fund, which will be working with the charity World Vision on the Haiti project.

Biondo says Family Christian's largest presale was Casting Crowns' previous album, "The Altar and the Door," which sold 28,000 before street date. "We've already exceeded that number," he says of the current presale, which began in early August. "We project to more than double the previous record level of presales."

Helping hand: Family Christian Stores teamed with Casting Crowns on a presale for charity.

Casting Crowns lead vocalist Mark Hall says the band is ha[ppy] to see CD sales benefiting such a worthy cause. "They are very m[ission]-minded and they always want to do something with presa[les] so that we can help people," he says. "With the last record, we [sent] CDs to the troops overseas." —DEF

DR. FEELGOOD

Embraced By The Hip-Hop Community, Robin Thicke Continues To Croon About Sex And Love

For perhaps the first time in history, a Caucasian soul singer who once rocked hippie hair and whose father portrayed a TV dad on an '80s sitcom was ballsy enough to adopt a celebrated rapper's lyrics and make a love song out of it—and his effort is winning praise.

On his upcoming fourth solo effort, "Sex Therapy," slated for a Dec. 15 release on Star Trak/Interscope Records, Robin Thicke took lines from Rakim's "Mahogany" and laid them atop a sample of Al Green's "I'm Glad You're Mine" for a track titled "Mrs. Sexy."

"When I played it for Jay-Z, he was like, 'First of all, who do you think you are with Rakim's lyrics?' " Thicke jokes. "But I'm doing it totally out of respect for the great Rakim. I'm bringing his lyrics to a new generation because everybody should know how amazing he is."

Thicke—who previously collaborated with Lil Wayne, Busta Rhymes, 50 Cent, Pharrell and Rick Ross, among others—has long embraced the hip-hop community, and the affection has been reciprocated. Guests include Snoop Dogg, Kid Cudi, Lil Wayne protégé Nicki Minaj, Jay-Z and the Game. R&B cohorts Estelle and Jazmine Sullivan also appear on the album, while Polow Da Don, Teddy Riley, Dre and Vidal, and Jeff Bhasker are among the producers, marking the first time Thicke and longtime collaborator Pro Jay have turned over the controls.

"You have to believe that it has something to do with him being a good artist and his music being legit," manager/A&R man Neil Jacobson says. "He doesn't make hip-hop music, but it's a common gene there for him. When Lil Wayne heard 'Shooters,' he reached out and jumped on the track. Robin also has Andre Harrell, one of the most special people in the music industry, mentoring him. This results in [Thicke] having his finger on the pulse of the hip-hop and R&B community."

Other tracks on the album—which is available as a 12-song, more dance-driven set titled "Sex Therapy: The Session" or a pricier 17-track, ballad-heavy version titled "Sex Therapy: The Experience"—include "Diamonds" featuring the Game, in which Thicke shouts out the likes of Queen Latifah and Keyshia Cole; "Shakin It 4 Daddy," featuring Minaj, which will be serviced to radio and club DJs in the coming week; and the title track, which is No. 54 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart.

Oddly enough, in comparison with his previous sets, Thicke describes this album as having more of a "popular" sound. "In the past I've always held on a bit too tight—I wanted to write and produce all the music and I always wanted it to be so different. But, with that mentality I think I might have lost a little bit of the fun," he says. "With this album, I really just wanted to go back to what makes me happy and what is fun and just let it happen. As a result, the people that like radio and popular music might think this album is probably not bad."

In the same vein, the modest Thicke recently collaborated with new artist Leighton Meester from "Gossip Girl" fame, appearing on the first single from her Time Act/Universal Republic electro-pop debut album, "Somebody to Love."

"They called me and asked if I'd be interested in doing the song with her. I checked it out and thought it was a really good song," Thicke says of the collaboration. "It was a fun, cute, young pop song and I wanted to get in front of that audience to help them recognize my music and my new album when it comes out. So, it worked out for everybody."

Thicke is also featured on the new R. Kelly "Untitled" album, on a track titled "Pregnant" alongside Tyrese.

Thicke is currently on a promotional tour and will embark on an official tour early next year close to Valentine's Day, Jacobson says. The singer is also delving into the fashion world: He's part of a campaign with Hugo Boss for the launch of its latest cologne, Hugo Element, according to Interscope head of marketing Dennis Dennehy. Plus, Thicke has landed a role in an animated film that will premiere next year.

But in the meantime, he will keep reveling in his acceptance by the hip-hop community, calling the genre "no bullshit—it's all about keeping it real. For a white kid whose dad was on 'Growing Pains'—if he can work with Wayne and Busta and Ross and 50 and seem real, then he must be real." ••••

The Clipse Eyes A Fresh Start With First Columbia Album

Between label setbacks and its ex-manager's legal case, rap duo the Clipse has weathered its share of drama. Instead of wallowing in self-pity or anger, however, the brothers (Gene "Malice" and Terrence "Pusha T" Thornton) are reveling in the fresh start afforded by their third album, "Til the Casket Drops" (Re-Up/Columbia, Dec. 8).

"We've come through the fire," Malice says. "Thanks to our fans, we're still here."

"Til the Casket Drops" revisits the drug and crime themes the Clipse lyrically addressed to critical acclaim on its first two albums. But whereas 2002's "Lord Willin' " was more easy-going and 2006's "Hell Hath No Fury" was much darker, "Casket" strikes a balance between those two moods.

Peaking at No. 27 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart, its lead single, "I'm Good"—produced by longtime collaborator Pharrell Williams (half of the production duo the Neptunes)—captures the pair's survivor spirit. Chosen to build on the "Good" momentum is the head-bobbing hood anthem "Popular Demand (Popeyes)." Featuring fellow rap stalwart Cam'Ron, the mixshow track was also produced by Williams. Additional guests include Keri Hilson on "All Eyes on Me" and Kanye West on the project's setup single, "Kinda Like a Big Deal."

Meanwhile, the Clipse go dark and gritty with "Door Man," where Pusha T raps, "If the good die young, then the greats go to jail . . . I miss my Tony." The verse references former manager Anthony Gonzalez, who recently struck a plea deal on a federal drug conspiracy charge and is due to be sentenced in January. The duo is now managed by Steven Victor for William Victor Management and Yaneley Arty.

"This album is full of unhandcuffed drive and energy," Pusha T says of "Casket," which also features production by DJ Khalil and Sean C & LV. "We popped out of our usual element with the Neptunes, but it still has all the realness the Clipse are known for."

After an Elektra debut album was shelved in the late '90s, the Virginia Beach, Va., natives hit No. 1 R&B/hip-hop pay dirt with their 2002 Star Trak/Arista bow, "Lord Willin'." But the pair's momentum was halted in 2004 when its second album, "Hell Hath No Fury," got caught up in Arista's merger into sister label Jive Records. Owing to contractual stipulations, the Clipse stayed with Jive while the Neptunes' remaining Star Trak roster moved to Interscope.

An agreement was reached in 2006 for the Clipse to release "Hell" on its own Re-Up Records through Jive; a year later the duo left Jive and signed with Columbia. To date, "Lord Willin' " (featuring hit singles "Grindin' " and "When the Last Time") has sold 959,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. "Hell" stands at 205,000 units.

The chief element of Columbia/Sony Music's marketing push behind "Casket," Columbia VP product marketing Liz Hausle says, is the company's first apparel alliance with retailer Downtown Locker Room. The partnership will roll out an exclusive line of "I'm Good" Clipse T-shirts in its 70 stores during release week. The storewide campaign encompasses prime window space, banners tying in the album with the T-shirt line and a promotional mixtape CD. The T-shirt is separate from the Clipse's own Play Cloths apparel line. Celebrating its one-year anniversary, that brand boasts such fans as Jay-Z and Lupe Fiasco.

On the Clipse's immediate schedule are several high-profile appearances: the Bayou Classic in New Orleans (Nov. 28), mtvU's Woodie Awards (airing Dec. 4) and the "106 & Park" New Year's Eve bash on BET ("106 & Party"). A major 2010 tour is also being planned.

"The machine is there now and it's rolling in our favor," Malice says.

Pusha T adds, "It's fresh; no drama, no chains. This is our victory lap."

OK, THEN

OK Go Hops Off The Treadmill And Heads Into The Wild

In the music video for "WTF," the first single from OK Go's upcoming album "Of the Blue Colour of the Sky," the pop-rockers use a single take in front of a green screen to capture a dizzying palette of slow-fading colors. While the innovative clip recalls the hugely successful treadmill video for 2006's "Here It Goes Again," the song's fuzzed-out funk and odd time signature hint at a more experimental approach for the act's third full-length.

"There's nothing more boring than making the same record over and over," vocalist/guitarist Damian Kulash says.

"Sky," due Jan. 12 on Capitol Records, is a collection of offbeat pop tracks that departs from the band's catchy rock sound of past hits like "Get Over It" and "A Million Ways." "[The album] is more melancholic, and I love it. I'm so much more proud of it than anything before it," Kulash says.

For the follow-up to 2005's "Oh No," Kulash, bassist Tim Nordwind, keyboardist/guitarist Andy Ross and drummer Dan Konopka recruited producer Dave Fridmann (MGMT, Thursday) for a more "spacious, surreal" sound. The album was recorded in two-week intervals from October 2008 to May 2009 and OK Go traded off studio time with the Flaming Lips at Fridmann's secluded Tarbox Road Studios, a converted Amish barn in upstate New York.

The band emerged with what Kulash describes as a "wintery, dark record," with tracks like "Skyscrapers" and "All Is Not Lost" showcasing a slower, more falsetto-driven sound. Although the band is not expecting a radio push for "WTF," a Nov. 10 iTunes exclusive premiere of the song and video helped "warn people that something weirder is coming out," as Kulash puts it.

It's been said that old dogs can't learn new tricks, but legendary Australian hard rock quintet Powderfinger is out to prove that anyone can adapt.

The Brisbane band channeled Twitter's promotional power to build a head of steam ahead of its seventh studio album, "Golden Rule" (Universal Music), released Down Under Nov. 13.

On Oct. 2, the group played free "guerrilla" gigs in Brisbane, Sydney and Melbourne, leaking news of each through Twitter just 25 minutes before showtime. Some 2,000 spectators rushed to each performance, says the band's manager Paul Piticco. "We were completely blown away by the numbers that were waiting there to greet us," he adds.

>>>LUZ SALUTE

November has been a special month for Spanish pop singer Luz Casal: Not only did she receive rave reviews for two shows Nov. 11-12 at Paris' Châtelet Theater, on Nov. 13 she picked up France's highest cultural honor, the National Order of Arts and Letters.

Casal has long been a favorite with French audiences, and her 15th and most recent album, "La Pasión" (EMI/Blue Note), is a top 20 album there. She has said the project fulfills her dream of releasing an album of Latin American boleros from the genre's '40s-'50s golden age. Casal first received overseas attention in 1991 when she recorded the bolero "Piensa en Mí" for the Pedro Almodovar movie "Tacones Lejanos."

"La Pasión" is "a really significant release," EMI Music Spain director Simone Bosé says. "Luz treats the boleros with emotion and respect. She doesn't update the themes of love and loneliness, but recreates them with their original atmosphere."

The 12-song set peaked at No. 3 on Spain's Media Control chart one week after its Sept. 29 release. It was issued Oct. 12 in France and other leading continental European markets, as well as Mexico and Israel. Casal's Paris shows followed dates in Spain, Belgium and Greece in August and September, booked through Limac Producciones.

6 QUESTIONS with THALÍA

by LINILA COBO

With careers in music and acting, a syndicated weekly radio program, a TV show (on the V-Me network) and multiple lines of clothing and accessories to her name, Mexican star Thalía is much more than just a singer. But on her upcoming live album "Primera Fila," Thalía seeks to showcase her voice. The set, Thalía's first on Sony Music Latin after years with EMI, is part of the label's "Primera Fila" (First Row) series of live recordings and features Thalía performing with a 12-piece band. Set for release Dec. 1, "Primera Fila" will be sold as both a CD and a DVD. Additionally, a 45-minute documentary will air as a special on Televisa and Univision along with some of the live performances.

1 Where did the idea for this album come from?

I always wanted to record a live album, using great musicians and with challenging songs. Nearly two years ago, we got a call from [former Sony Music Latin president] Kevin Lawrie, who was at the taping of Vicente Fernandez's "Primera Fila." Kevin called Tommy [Mottola, Thalía's husband] and said, "This is exactly what I think Thalía should do." And Tommy said, "Don't tell me. She's been talking about it for years." I then met [Sony Music Latin VP of A&R] Paul Forat and [producer] Aureo Baqueiro, who I've known since I was 14 years old. This group of people was totally in synch with this dream and took it to the next level.

2 This is so different from your previous performances and recordings. Would you really have done it before?

It wouldn't have been the same album five years ago. This album found me at a moment in my career where I've done everything. I've been a singer, a dancer, an interpreter, everything. Being a mother [of 2-year-old Sabrin] has changed my core. And also, two years ago, I contracted Lyme disease, and that broke my life structure. I had to stop and ask myself, "What do you want? What makes you happy?" It liberated me of all my preconceptions, of everything my name means. And the Thalía who spends time at home with a ponytail and who goes out for pizza in her jeans is the same person that's on that stage.

3 In the documentary, you mention that your singing abilities have been questioned.

It was amusing to share that skepticism because it's been voiced. I've sung from the most "pop" songs to deep ballads. I started my career at 7 years old, singing from town to town. I've worn every outfit imaginable, I've danced every choreography, I've been set on fire. Everything. But as a singer, I did need to interpret songs with weight and depth and structure that opened up another part of me. It doesn't mean that what I've done wasn't important, but at this very moment, I'm the person you see on "Primera Fila."

4 You sold a lot of albums when the market was at its peak. Are you prepared for the lower sales of today's market?

The album has become a promotional tool to enable you to be in contact with your fans, to continue to grow and develop your career. But if you think you're going to make money selling albums, you're on another planet. First of all, where would you buy it? Those spectacular music stores are gone. And culture has become disposable. There's no longer that culture of following an entire album. What I want to do is take this DVD—this small stage with great musicians—and re-create it on tour. Allow people to almost rest their elbows on the stage.

5 Did you feel naked performing without the usual bells and whistles?

You have no idea what I felt those two first rehearsal days. I was trembling, my hands were freezing. I was so nervous about being so vulnerable for the first time and having people see me as I am. But I think being so nervous allowed me to go beyond my limits. I never doubted myself, because the stage has been my school.

6 You include a duet with Joan Sebastian—written just for you—and a duet with newcomer Pedro Capó. Was anything left off the album?

We did everything we planned. But it's important to underscore: I prepared very hard. I took voice lessons for six months with Celine Dion's teacher. I physically prepared with a workout routine. I rehearsed the songs to death. ••••

TORI AMOS

Midwinter Graces
Producer: Tori Amos
Universal Republic
Release Date: Nov. 10

With past references to "the little g," the incriminating questions of "God" and a penchant to debate spiritual issues, Tori Amos hardly seems the type to make a holiday album. But the Methodist minister's daughter rarely ceases to surprise. Her latest release, "Midwinter Graces," is a typically provocative—in the best possible way—entry in the yuletide canon. Amos reaches deep into the world of carols for ancient and less obvious fare that she subsequently recasts on string-laden songs like "Candle: Coventry Carol," "Jeanette, Isabella," "Holly, Ivy and Rose" (which features her daughter, Natashya) and "Emmanuel." The lush, big band-styled "Pink and Glitter" is the most interesting of Amos' five originals, though on the album-closing "Our New Year," she appears to express hope, but not expectation, for a messianic visitation.—GG

ROCK

SWITCHFOOT

Hello Hurricane Producers: Mike Elizondo, Switchfoot
Lowercase People/Atlantic
Release Date: Nov. 10

After establishing a berth at mainstream radio with "Dare You to Move" (from its 2003 album, "The Beautiful Letdown"), earnest San Diego rock band Switchfoot hasn't quite managed to complete its crossover from the Christian-music scene that first embraced the group. The band's latest release, "Hello Hurricane," may (and should) change that: It's a sleekly presented modern-rock album with no shortage of bruising guitars or catchy choruses. Like much of U2's work, these songs wrap a faith-based message in a secular package. Switchfoot produced "Hello Hurricane" with Mike Elizondo, and the album's varied arrangements reflect his diverse résumé. On "Needle and Haystack Life," singer Jon Foreman works his breathy croon over surging pop-punk guitars; "This Is the Sound" has a brutish, heavy-metal vibe; "Enough" rides a percolating art-folk groove; and "Bullet Soul" could be something by Swedish garage rock band the Hives.—MW

THEM CROOKED VULTURES

Producers: Them Crooked Vultures
Interscope Records
Release Date: Nov. 17

With Queens of the Stone Age's Josh Homme on guitar/vocals, Foo Fighters' Dave Grohl on drums and Led Zeppelin's John Paul Jones on bass/keyboards, Them Crooked Vultures' self-titled debut comes with a high pedigree and even higher expectations. Like Monsters of Folk (Conor Oberst, Jim James, M. Ward and Mike Mogis), this rock supergroup delivers by drawing upon each member's talents and creating a sound that's refreshingly singular and remarkably fun. "Them Crooked Vultures" features technically polished, bluesy guitar-driven bar rock, with the song "Mind Eraser, No Chaser" and first single "New Fang" relying on start-stop tempos and punishing solos. While Jones adds depth on bass and Grohl's drumming is predictably top-notch, Homme commands the spotlight throughout the album with sexually charged yet haunting vocals. "I don't need a reason, baby/Put your arms around me," he sings on "Caligulove" before an unexpected keyboard solo sweeps the track in a different direction. The set may be a one-off experiment, but the band's chemistry points to a potentially bright future with this star-studded lineup.—JL

R. KELLY

Untitled
Producers: various
Jive
Release Date: Dec. 1

Outside of the hits "Same Girl" and "I'm a Flirt," R. Kelly's last album in 2007, "Double Up," was a guest-heavy exercise in boredom. But the singer/songwriter redeems himself on his newest release, "Untitled." Predictably, sex and love are both displayed in ample measure. But this time around, Kelly eschews the interplanetary sexcapades of "Double Up" for fewer cameos and more down-to-earth fare. Beyond top 10 lead single "Number One" (featuring Keri Hilson), the album is signature Kelly: fantasy-filled romps, club jams and heartfelt ballads brought to life by the singer's ear for catchy beats and melodies and mood-setting lyrics. Leading the charge are the playful "Echo" (abetted by Kelly's sexy yodeling) and "Whole Lotta Kisses," the lively "Be My #2" (a nod to his stepping roots) and the emotionally sincere ballads "Religious" and "Elsewhere." The one constant throughout: Kelly's soul-dripping tenor. With 18 years and counting under his belt, the singer/songwriter reminds us why he remains an R&B force.—GM

RAP

WALE

Attention Deficit
Producers: various
Allido/Interscope
Release Date: Nov. 10

Washington, D.C., rapper Wale owns the distinction of being the most well-rounded of hip-hop's latest class: He packed quirky smarts into last year's "Seinfeld"-themed "The Mixtape About Nothing" before splashing onto radio with the hook-laden Lady Gaga collaboration "Chillin'." He continues to show his range on "Attention Deficit," his long-delayed yet sonically dazzling proper debut. Working with an all-star list of producers, Wale sounds as comfortable on indie fare like the Dave Sitek-produced "TV in the Radio" as on sizzling stereo-bangers like Cool & Dre's "World Tour." His lyrical themes also cover a lot of ground, from the lothario come-ons of "Pretty Girls" to the cautious tale of superficiality told on "90210." Luckily, Wale never spreads himself too thin on "Attention Deficit" and maintains the urgency of his mixtapes to ensure that the set contains little filler. With an immediate likability and a penchant for innovative pop music, Wale could soon reach Kanye West-esque heights of artistic and commercial viability.—JL

LATIN

ALEJANDRO SANZ

Paraiso Express
Producer: Tommy Torres
Warner Music Latina
Release Date: Nov. 10

The sound of Spanish pop star Alejandro Sanz's new studio set, "Paraiso Express," is more melodic and commercial than his past two, more ruminative efforts—and this is a good thing. Sanz wrote most of the new songs at the piano, and it shows on tracks like "Sin Que Se Note," which conjures vintage Elton John in its big choruses and melodies. Sanz's quirky, inventive side is heard on the reggae-tinged "Mala," with its punctuated guitars—a mix of flamenco and rock—and on the moody "Lola Soledad," a kind of vampy tango imbued with melancholia and awash in a multiplicity of surprising arrangements. The songs on "Paraiso Express" veer in many directions, from solo piano to walls of electric guitar to a predilection for the Hammond B-3 organ. The least surprising track is the bilingual single "Looking for Paradise," which features Alicia Keys. Take it as the light sorbet that cleanses the palate before a gourmet meal.—LC

Producers: various
Smalltown Supersound
Release Date: Nov. 17

Working with a host of producers on her second release, "Don't Stop," Norwegian pop singer/DJ Annie continues to balance her carefree playfulness with darker themes of struggling love to create a bittersweet dance party. But regardless of the mood, Annie steals listeners' hearts with her light-as-a-feather vocal delivery and infectious beats. On the electro-tinged "I Don't Like Your Band," she reveals her distaste for her lover's band ("Your latest 7-inch sounds obscene/Unless you spin it at 45") and suggests seeking inspiration from the "cosmic songs" of Kraftwerk, Bobby O and Giorgio Moroder. The haunting Timo Kaukolampi-produced "Marie Cherie" is a dark journey through the life of an abused girl who commits suicide and goes unnoticed. Annie lightens the mood on tracks like the swirling Brian Higgins-produced "Loco" (featuring cameos by Franz Ferdinand's Alex Kapranos and Nick McCarthy) and "The Breakfast Song," on which she repeatedly asks over snare taps and heavy synth, "What do you want?/What do you want for breakfast?" The album includes a five-track EP, which features several songs ("I Know Ur Girlfriend Hates Me," "I Can't Let Go" and "Sweet") that were originally intended for a 2008 version of the album that was halted following Annie's split from Island Records.—MP

NEW & NOTEWORTHY

AC/DC

Backtracks

Producers: Sam Horsburgh, Vic Maile, Quaglieri, John Jackson
Sony Legacy

Release Date: Nov. 10

The most popular version of the new AC/DC boxed set, "Backtracks," will be the one that includes a CD of B-sides and other rarities, a CD of live performances and a DVD of videos. But the real prize is the deluxe configuration, available from the band's Web site, which includes an extra CD of performances, a DVD of a 2003 concert, a vinyl record, a high-quality photo book and replicas of various memorabilia—schoolboy out-fit not included—in a case that doubles as a working amplifier. As for the music, AC/DC has spent three decades giving old-fashioned rock the frenzied energy of metal, and the band hasn't heard a riff that's too raucous (check out the song "Stick Around") or a double-entendre that's too crude (one rarity is called "Snake Eye"). The concert—a 2003 performance from Munich—shows the band in its true element, as guitarist Angus Young seems to sweat out his own weight onstage. It's good, dirty fun.—RL

NIRVANA

Live at Reading

Producer: Nirvana
Geffen/UMe

Release Date: Nov. 3

A humbling moment of Nirvana's 1992 performance at England's Reading Festival comes during the intro to the powerful rocker "Lithium." Dressed in a white medical gown and blue jeans, frontman Kurt Cobain hits a wrong note and is forced to restart the tune. It wouldn't be the first instance during the band's 90-minute set that Cobain flubs a song (he struggles to tune his guitar throughout "Love Buzz"), but the thousands of concertgoers who sung along in unison to "Lithium" proved that a few mistakes couldn't spoil this historic event. Cobain isn't remembered for his technical chops, but this Reading appearance—released for the first time on the CD/DVD package "Live at Reading"—captured the trio's skill at turning simple power chords into some of the most memorable rock anthems of the '90s. Filmed less than a year after the release of "Nevermind," the concert features intense performances of "Aneurysm," "Tourette's" and "Territorial Pissings," mixed with such alternative gems as "All Apologies," "Polly" and "Come As You Are." For those who missed Nirvana in the flesh, "Live at Reading" preserves the band's commanding stage presence during its short-lived career.—MP

LaFace/Jive

With its layered harmonies, mellow production and lyrics of heartache, Usher's "Papers" closely resembles his 2004 No. 1 hit "Burn," and that's a very good thing. It's the first time in a while that the singer sounds energized, as he unleashes deeply personal lyrics about the real-life sacrifices he made for love. "For you I gave my heart and turned my back against the world/'Cause you were my girl," he sings, a thinly veiled reference to ex-wife Tameka Foster-Raymond. "I done turned into the man that I never thought I'd be/I'm ready to sign them papers." The overwhelming fan response to "Papers" has provided an early boost in anticipation of Usher's forthcoming album, "Raymond vs. Raymond," meaning fans will hopefully hear more breakup laments from the R&B heavyweight soon.—SM

SHAKIRA FEATURING LIL WAYNE

Give It Up to Me (3:03)

Producer: Timbaland

Writers: various

Epic

The second single from Shakira's upcoming "She Wolf" finds the Latin star favoring hip-hop beats over her signature brand of international pop. On "Give It Up to Me," the ever-present Lil Wayne knocks out another witty guest verse over Timbaland's Middle Eastern-tinged production. Shakira, meanwhile, relays an alluring, yet oddly submissive message: "You can have it all/Anything you want you can make it yours," she sings over hand claps and pounding bass. "Put me in a cage and lock me away/And I'll play the games that you want me to play." The singer's undulating vocals, quirky yet sensual, hint to her past hits but feel somewhat out of step with Wayne's wordplay and Timbaland's production. While "Give It Up to Me" is sexy and danceable, Shakira's flirtation with a different genre ultimately obscures her own unique style.—KP

Universal Republic

Working '80s influences into a current pop hit is nothing new these days, but Leighton Meester's "Somebody to Love" is extra faithful to its source material. The "Gossip Girl" star's debut single is a carefully constructed ode to vintage Madonna—particularly in its "Vogue"-like verses, where Meester semi-raps rather than sings. The lyrics are lovelorn, as she celebrates her jet-setter lifestyle but also mourns her inability to settle down. "It's hard to find a mate when you're gone before he waits," Meester says. "They say it's hard to achieve, but can't a girl believe?" The song's high point, however, comes during Robin Thicke's cameo, as the R&B singer delivers a catchy chorus that cries out for a sped-up dance remix.—SM

Publishers: EMI April Music, Martin Johnson Music (ASCAP); Sony/ATV (BMI)
Columbia

Boys Like Girls roared into the top 40 this summer with the hyperactive single "Love Drunk," but for its follow-up, the band slows things down and displays a softer side. The group pairs up with Taylor Swift for "Two Is Better Than One," which fits its own repertoire as well as the country star's. Lead singer/songwriter Martin Johnson's falsetto complements Swift's sweet tone, and producer Brian Howes builds an orchestral arrangement around their vocals that would be well-suited to a climactic movie moment. The delicate violin strings, conducted by David Campbell, echo the song's declaration about the importance of mending a relationship on the rocks. Already on track to be another hit for Boys Like Girls, this moving duet stands as proof of its own title.—MM

Two years after taking the indie-rock world by storm with its much blogged-about self-titled debut, Vampire Weekend returns with "Cousins," the first single from its forthcoming second album, "Contra." Recorded in Mexico City, the two-and-a-half-minute burner focuses on the band's more rambunctious tendencies, with guitarist Chris Tomson delivering mean, Ventures-esque surf guitar lines over a frenetic post-punk rhythm that recalls Wire. Bassist Chris Baio has called it the band's "heaviest" song, not to be undone by Ezra Koenig's intriguingly nonlinear lyrics. "Cousins" finds the boat-shoed singer/songwriter offering zingers like, "Dad was a risk taker/His was a shoemaker/You, greatest-hits 2006 little list-maker." None of it makes much sense, but then again, neither did Koenig's head-scratching odes to Oxford commas and Lil Jon. Besides, isn't that what quality new wave is all about?—RH

Coming Full 'Circle'

Ticketmaster, Bon Jovi Use Concert Ticket Sales To Drive Music Sales

A partnership involving Ticketmaster Entertainment, Island Def Jam (IDJ), promoter AEG Live and Bon Jovi helped drive the band's album "The Circle" to No. 1 on the Billboard 200 last week on the strength of first-week sales of 163,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. More than 20,000 of those sales were notched during a four-day Ticketmaster promotion that allowed purchasers of presale Bon Jovi tour tickets to also buy a digital download of "The Circle" for $9.99.

"The Circle" is the fourth consecutive Bon Jovi album tied to a Ticketmaster promotion, dating back to "Bounce" in 2002. That relationship has evolved from recorded-music sales driving ticket sales to ticket sales driving music sales—which in many ways is reflective of the music industry at large.

"We've done things where if you bought the album, there was a code inside allowing fans to purchase presale tickets," says Greg Schmale, senior director of music services at Ticketmaster. "Here, we put the presale up before the album came out. We wanted to allow consumers to see the ticket inventory before they committed to purchasing the album. Then the sale of the album was added to the order."

According to IDJ, about 23,000 downloads resulted from the presale promotion, which preceded other presales and the public on-sale for the Circle tour, which begins Feb. 19 in Seattle. The promotion's success is also an example of how music business sectors that once pursued separate agendas are now working together.

"We have to get out of our silos and understand we have to sell everything," IDJ senior VP of sales Jim Roppo says. "But it has to be a good value proposition. [The album] was priced aggressively so it was competitive in the marketplace. People respond to that."

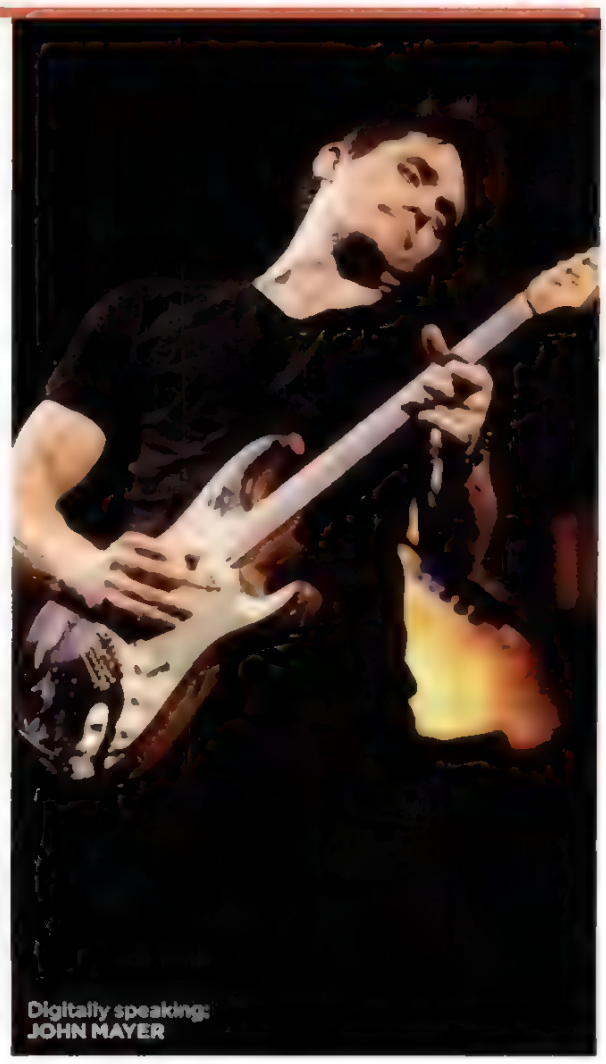
Bon Jovi's Lost Highway trek was last year's top-grossing tour, at $210 million in gross ticket sales, according to Billboard Boxscore. "It's really about how do we convert those people to buy albums, and this promotion was ideally crafted to accomplish that," Roppo says. "Ticketmaster did a great job of messaging all the previous Bon Jovi buyers in their database; we also had a lot of support from BonJovi.com."

From the label side, the messaging was also about timely redemption. "SoundScan only counts redemptions, not upfront sales," Roppo adds. "So we put a lot of energy into messaging consumers who had participated in the offer to hurry and redeem the first week." A bonus of three live songs and an interview with frontman Jon Bon Jovi were offered as added incentive.

While Ticketmaster promotions with "Bounce" and "Have a Nice Day" (2005) included ticket presale coupons in the physical CD, its 2007 promotion for Bon Jovi's No. 1-debuting "Lost Highway" bundled an album download with presale tickets purchased for the band's 10-night stand at Prudentia Center in Newark, N.J.

"With only those 10 shows t work with, there were abou 55,000 ticket presales and re demptions were about 10%, Roppo says. "This time we di about 38,000 ticket presales an had 23,000 redemptions in th first week alone."

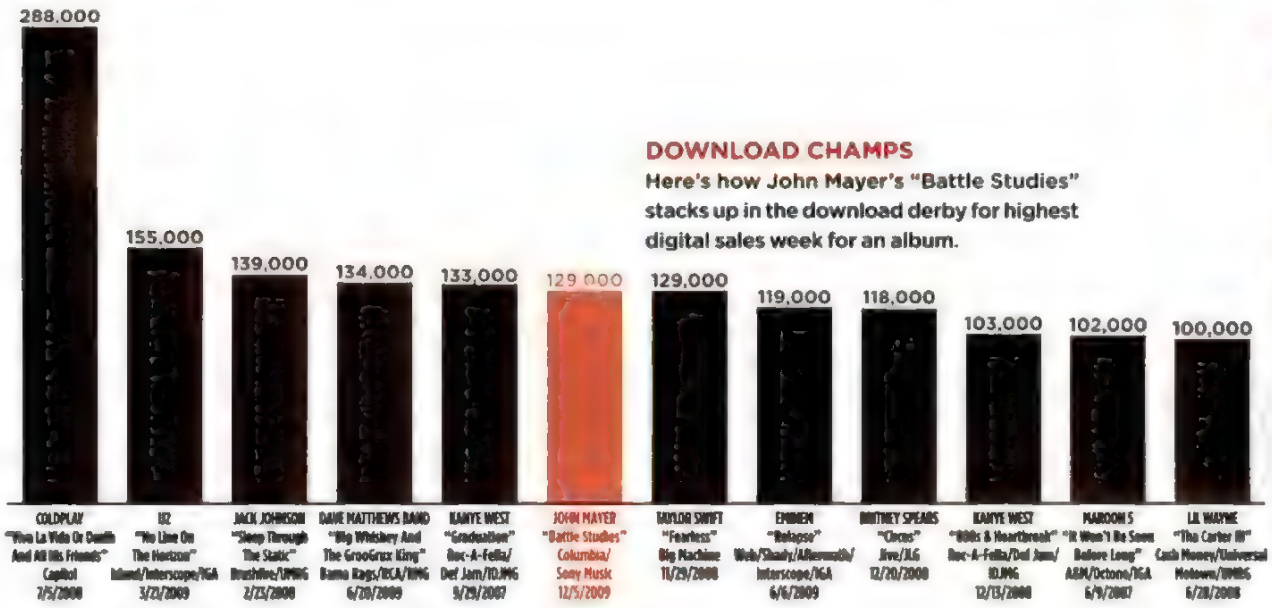
One of the big takeaway from the latest promotion Roppo notes, is the move to ward more first-week digit sales for Bon Jovi. Digital sale for "The Circle" accounted fo 58,000 albums, representin 36% of total sales.



Roppo credits Bon Jovi mar agement for understanding th potential of tying in album an ticket sales. "Most manage and artists will say, 'If I can g $10 more for my ticket, I' rather take that than sell m album,' " he says.

Bon Jovi Management Paul Korzilius, who co manages the band, emph sizes that the fans are th bottom line. "Ticketmaster ar Bon Jovi have long worked t gether to distribute tickets ar recorded product to custome in as many ways as possible ensure customers get wh they want, when they want and how they want it," Korzi ius says. "If the customer happy, we are all happy." ••

'BATTLE' CRY



Not only does John Mayer collect his second No. 1 on the Billboard 200 with "Battle Studies" selling 286,000 copies in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan, the album also posts the third-best sales week for a digital set this year and the best showing for Columbia Records. ¶ The set shifted 129,000 copies through digital retailers (45% of its overall first-week sales), making it only the 12th album to sell at least 100,000 downloads in one week since SoundScan began tracking digital album sales in 2005 (see chart). ¶ Mayer's sizable digital sales shouldn't be a surprise. His last release, the live set "Where the Light Is," has seen 30% of its 390,000 overall sales come from download services. As for his last studio release, 2006's "Continuum," downloads make up 18% of its nearly 2 million in sales.

Fantastic Journey

X Factor' Alum JLS Outsells Robbie Williams

year ago. Alexandra Burke beat fresh-faced British oy band JLS to the crown on "The X Factor." Now, owever, the group has won a different crown: No. on the U.K. albums chart following a close bat- with U.K. megastar Robbie Williams.

Both JLS' self-titled Epic debut and Williams' omeback Virgin album, "Reality Killed the Video tar," arrived in U.K. stores Nov. 9. The group's les of 239,000 copies edged out Williams by less an 1%, according to the Official Charts Co. (OCC).

"It's an amazing achievement," band member nathan "JB" Gill says. "Usually you have a sense om the midweek sales figures, but we had no idea—it was so close. When I found out, I literally got off the phone and screamed for joy."

Epic U.K. head of marketing Murray Rose describes overtaking Williams as "the icing on the cake." But he also notes that after JLS' lead single, "Beat Again," hit No. 1 in July, the label always felt "bullish" about dropping the album during the busy fourth quarter. The album has now sold 373,000 copies, according to the OCC.

Crucial to the album's sales success was the band's Nov. 1 return to "The X Factor." The ITV1 ratings champ has influenced the singles and albums charts in recent weeks: The last five No. 1 singles (including JLS' upbeat R&B anthem "Everybody in Love") and four No. 1 albums have all received exposure on the show.

JLS—which stands for "Jack the Lad Swing"—has since appeared on various programs, ranging from ITV's daytimer "GMTV" (Nov. 3) to Channel 4's youth-oriented "T4" (Nov. 21). To maximize exposure among the band's female 35-and-under target demo, a prime-time TV ad campaign rolled out one week prior to the album's release.

Online marketing has also played a vital role. According to Rose, JLS boasts the third-most popular Web site of all Sony acts—behind Michael Jackson and Adam Lambert—with 3.7 million page impressions for the month up to Nov. 22. The burgeoning popularity of Gill and fellow band members Oritsé Williams, Marvin Humes and Aston Merrygold was vividly illustrated when their appearance at a Nov. 14 Christmas concert in Birmingham was abandoned due to overcrowding.

While teenage fans hyperventilate over the band's good looks, that doesn't mask the group's considerable talent. The glossy mix of hook-laden pop hits, electro-flavored R&B and sentimentally earnest ballads on "JLS" offers a surprisingly robust experience, especially on the anthemic "One Shot" and the soulful, acoustic-vibed "Close to You."

Next up for the band—managed by London-based Modest Management, which also handles Burke and Leona Lewis—is a national U.K. theater tour booked by London-based Creative Artists Agency. It kicks off Feb. 1 at Ipswich Regent Theatre. International plans have yet to be finalized, but Rose says a European album launch is likely next year.

Gill says, "We want to go international in due time, [but] we want to cement ourselves in the U.K. It really is going to be a fantastic journey for JLS and Epic." •••• eel Magnolia, the country duo of eghan Linsey and Joshua Scott nes, is climbing Billboard's Hot untry Songs chart with its first sine, "Keep On Lovin' You." Written by ris Stapleton and Trent Willmon, the ng is No. 31 this week. But beyond e single, the Big Machine act has a ality show to thank for its current iance to shine.

Linsey and Jones are a real-life cou- who were separately pursuing solo reers. After deciding to give it a go as duo, a friend encouraged the couple try out for CMT's "Can You Duet."

The pair won the competition in Aust and immediately hit the road to visit dio. WWQM Madison, Wis., PD John bastian was aware of the pair from the ow, but he says it was its station visit at sealed the deal. Describing the sine as "hooky and unique," he adds, Vith a hipness about them and harnies reminiscent of the Eagles, they ve the look and the sound to go far."

Ponchatoula, La., native Linsey, ose musical influences include Dolly rton, Janis Joplin and Tanya Tucker—nybody with some soul, anyone who n tell a story"—was opening for Brad isley, Toby Keith and other acts as a teenager. She moved to Nashville after high school. Jones, of Charleston, Ill., counts the Beatles and Willie Nelson among his influences. He pursued his music career while working in sales at a country radio station in Illinois. Traveling to Nashville to perform at the famed Bluebird Café on weekends, Jones eventually convinced the radio company to transfer him to a Nashville station. One night while visiting a downtown karaoke bar, he met Linsey.

Now the pair is finishing its yet-untitled debut album, tentatively due in February. Collaborating with producer Dann Huff (Keith Urban), Linsey and Jones either wrote or co-wrote seven of the album's 11 tracks.

Noting the duo has "the chemistry factor" in its favor, Linsey says, "We write about real-life stories—like breaking up and getting back together. People relate to that."

Jones cites "the intensity of our vocal blend" as another point of distinction. "I was a more stylistic singer and Meghan was more polished," he says. "We kind of met in the middle and learned from each other. Now it's evened out into this 'one-voice sound' that works." —Ken Tucker

Joining forces: STEEL MAGNOLIA

Intriguing lineup: THEM CROOKED VULTURES

FEEDING FRENZY

With their rich pedigree and dynamic sound, Them Crooked Vultures' self-titled debut album has made a splash at radio and retail. The alt-rock supergroup—featuring Led Zeppelin's John Paul Jones, Queens of the Stone Age's Josh Homme and Foo Fighters' Dave Grohl—debuts this week at No. 12 on the Billboard 200. The group's bruising first single, "New Fang," is No. 15 on the Alternative chart.

Interscope's Nov. 17 release of "Them Crooked Vultures" is the culmination of a shrewd, tour-driven promotional campaign. The long-rumored collaboration was officially unveiled during a midnight show at Chicago's Metro during the close of the Lollapalooza festival in August. With Jones on bass and keyboards, Homme on guitar and vocals, Grohl on drums and Alain Johannes on rhythm guitar for its live shows, the group has since played select dates in Europe as well as sold-out stops in New York and Los Angeles.

Although the band sparked intrigue due to its members' previous work, high demand on modern rock radio suggests the album is being received as more than a casual side project. "This is one of those times when the audience has truly responded to the music, not just the spectacle of three guys from three great bands," says Matt Pinfield, host of "The Rock Show" on WRXP New York. "Rock fans want bands they can really be excited about. It was never a guarantee that it would all come together on this record, but the band really made this work."

After "New Fang" was offered as an iTunes free download Nov. 2, Them Crooked Vultures made the 13-track album available as a stream on their YouTube page one week prior to release. According to Pinfield, the move spiked the number of radio requests for non-single tracks and created excitement before the physical release. "It showed that people were feeling the whole album, not just one or two songs," he says.

Having just wrapped a trek in the Pacific Northwest, the act will visit Germany and the United Kingdom before touring Australia and New Zealand in January.

Seems Like Old Times: Catalog Returns To 200

John Mayer captures his second No. 1 on the Billboard 200 with "Battle Studies" (see story, page 30), bowing atop the tally with 286,000 copies. The Columbia artist leads a pre-Thanksgiving parade of new albums onto the list, including debuts from Norah Jones (No. 3 with 180,000), Casting Crowns (No. 4 with 167,000) and 50 Cent (No. 5 with 160,000).

DON'T STOP BELIEVIN': Your eyes aren't deceiving you: That is indeed Journey's 21-year-old "Greatest Hits" album back on the Billboard 200 at No. 159 for the first time since 1990.

The band's classic compilation is one of the fresh (old) faces to dot our revamped Billboard 200 this week, as the tally has been tweaked to allow catalog sets to once again enter the list.

Since May 25, 1991, catalog albums have had their own Billboard home: the Top Pop Catalog chart. Catalog albums are defined as those that are at least 18 months old, have fallen below No. 100 on the Billboard 200 and do not have an active single on our radio charts.

This week, which also not-so-coincidentally marks the first chart week of Billboard's 2010 chart year, we made over the Billboard 200 so that older titles were brought back into the mix.

It might be easier to think of it this way: For the past five years, we've had three main all-genre album charts —the Billboard 200, Top Pop Catalog Albums and Top Comprehensive Albums.

From May 1991 until last week, the Billboard 200 only housed current or new albums. The "older" titles, or, reissues of old albums, charted on Top Pop Catalog. Then, in 2003, we launched the Comprehensive Albums chart, which blended together old and new releases.
